FLAMING CRASH OF AIRLINER KILLS 28 PERSONS AT SCOTTISH AIRPORT

PRESTWICK, Scotland, Dec. 25 (AP)—A British Overseas Airways Corp. Stratocruiser overturned and crashed in flames while landing at Prestwick airport today. The crash killed 28 of the 36 persons aboard, including two Americans.

The New York-bound airliner was carrying 25 passengers and 11 crewmen. Seven of the crew were able to escape when the nose of the ship broke off in the crash, but only one passenger, identified as James H. Russell of England, survived.

The two Americans were Dr. and Mrs. Walter C. Mayland of Evanston, Ill. Dr. Mayland, 63 years old, was an oral surgeon.

Another resident of the United States, Kenneth R. Davidson, a Briton, of Bronxville, N.Y., was among the victims.

Only 4 Were Bound for U.S.

Although the plane was one of B.O.A.C.'s first class flights to New York, only four of the passengers were headed for the United States. The other 21, apparently Scots returning home for Christmas, were scheduled to get off in Prestwick, the airport for Glasgow.

Nine of the passengers were B.O.A.C. employes.

The crash occurred at 3:30 a.m. (9:30 p.m. Friday, St. Louis time). Rain enveloped the field and low-hanging clouds obscured the view as the big plane swooped in for a landing.

Alex Tate, a Scot employed as a bus driver for United States Air Force units stationed at Prestwick, said the airliner pancaked on the runway.

"There was a trail of fire for about a half mile," he said. "Then there was an explosion, soon the plane was a blazing inferno."

Two of the craft's four engines were thrown 60 feet by the blast as the plane rolled over on its side.

United States airmen and firemen stationed at the field dashed into the flames in efforts to rescue the trapped men and women.

The pilot of the ship, Capt. W. Laing Stewart, was one of the seven crewmen saved when the nose broke off. All 11 crew members had been scheduled to end their run at Prestwick where a fresh crew waited to take the plane on to New York.

Flight Was Delayed.

Stewart had delayed the start of the flight from London airport for four hourse because of bad weather conditions in Manchester, where the plane was scheduled to make its first stop. Two passengers waiting at Manchester to board the craft were finally flown to London and the stop at Manchester was canceled.

Among the dead were the wife of the plane's navigator, John Goddard, and their small child. They were traveling with him for a Christmas holiday in Scotland. Goddard escaped with only face injuries.

The Maylands were on their way home to Evanston from Cairo, Egypt, where they had visited a daughter and son-in-law.

Davidson, 49, was a former world's amateur badminton champion and past performer in comedian Ken Murray's "Blackouts" in Hollywood in the 1940s. A native of Manchester, Davidson lived in La Canada, Calif., from 1945 until 1952, when he moved to Bronxville, where he was connected with a sporting goods concern.

The fourth passenger bound for New York was identified as L. L. Goldfine, Jamaica, British West Indies, who was among those killed.

Convict 'Sings' to Provide His Children's Christmas

171 KILLED IN AUTO CRASHES SO FAR ON HOLIDAY WEEKEND

CHICAGO, Dec. 25 (AP)—The accident death toll reached 229 as Christmas waned, including 171 traffic fatalities, 29 in fires and 29 from miscellaneous causes. The holiday period covered began at 6 p.m. Friday.

The National Safety Council had estimated 370 deaths, of which 164 would be on the highways, for the full 54-hour holiday weekend which ends at midnight Sunday. Missouri listed seven traffic deaths and one other accident fatality. Illinois reported eight deaths in traffic and three other fatal accidents.

Ned H. Dearborn, president of the safety council, pointed out that the current traffic fatality rate was three times that of Safe Driving Day, Dec. 15, when deaths numbered 51. He issued a new plea for safe, sober driving.

Before noon on Christmas, the toll had passed the average of 97 traffic deaths a day set during the first 10 months of this year. An Associated Press survey made for a 54-hour comparative weekend period Dec. 10-12 recorded 331 violent deaths from all accident causes, including 225 in traffic, 39 in fires, and 67 in other types of mishaps.

Last Christmas weekend—a three-day, 78-hour, holiday period—accidents took 717 lives, 585 in traffic and 83 in fires, with 111 others.

NEW WEEKEND LOW OF 9 PRISONERS IN POLICE HOLDOVER

There were only nine prisoners in Central District holdover yesterday to eat a Christmas dinner of spaghetti and meat balls, a new low figure for a weekend, veteran policeman reported.

Normal number of weekend holdover "guests" varies from 70 to 120, depending largely on the number of acute alcoholics rounded up for Monday appearances in police court. Christmas eve celebrants who came to the attention of police downtown were locked up until reasonably sober, then released without charges, as a Christmas gift from the Police Department.

The nine prisoners who spent Christmas in the holdover are held in connection with major crimes which are still under investigation.

12 KILLED, 4 HURT IN BLAST, FIRE ON ARKANSAS FARM

PARKIN, Ark., Dec. 25 (AP)—An explosion, followed by fire, ripped through a tenant house near here Christmas eve, killing 12 members of two Mexican farm families and injuring four others.

The blast, apparently touched off by kerosene, came as the 17 were gathered around a cook stove making hot tamales for a holiday celebration.

Ten of the dead were youngsters, children of Pete Santana, 44 years old, who died tonight, and Ruel Montana, tenant farmers on the Owen Cook plantation 10 miles south of here.

Santana's wife also perished. Members of the family said she escaped with the others, but returned to the flaming house to rescue her baby and was killed herself. Montana and one of his sons were in serious condition at a hospital. Mrs. Cook said she was told the explosion came after kerosene was poured on the smouldering wood fire in the stove.

SONS BORN TO MRS. SANTA AND MRS. WHITE CHRISTMAS

BALTIMORE, Dec. 25 (AP)—At Union Memorial Hospital this Christmas morning a son was born to Mrs. Louise White Christmas and her husband William G. Christmas, of nearby Monkton.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Dec. 25 (AP)—'Twas the night before Christmas when the baby boy arrived at Santa's house. Santa had been making his Christmas eve rounds (since Michael Santa is a patrolman) shortly before his wife, Mrs. Catheryn Santa, gave birth to a 6-pound, 8-ounce boy, Michael Santa Jr.

Chief of Detectives Plays Santa Claus for Robber Who Cleared Up Two Burglaries.

Chief of Detectives James E. Chapman was away from his office for three and a half hours one day last week playing Santa Claus. He was solving a couple of safe burglaries, too.

The strange Christmas story began early in the week when a convict serving a long term for robbery sent word he wanted to speak to Chapman.

"Listen, chief," he said, "I'm stuck here in the pen and it's getting close to Christmas. I've got two of the swellest kids in the world and they're going to have a miserable holiday. If you do something to make their Christmas a little brighter, I'll do some talking about a couple of jobs."

Chapman, who takes his tips where he finds them, jumped at the chance to make even a slight dent in the current crime wave.

So last Thursday he was out of contact with his office all afternoon. He was shouldering his way through the downtown pre-Christmas shopping throng with a chattering, bright-eyed child on either arm.

He took them to a luncheon in the main dining room of Hotel Statler. Then they made the department stores. Chapman kept digging in his pocket to buy some of the many attractive toys that captured the fancy of his young guests.

However, when Dennis, 2 years old, became fascinated with a $10 fire truck in the Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney toy department, Chapman dug and found that his well of plenty had gone dry. So he got on the telephone and ordered Detective Cpl. John Mahfood to meet him. He put the bite on Mahfood for a 10-dollar bill.

The many people who know Chapman and saw him with Dennis and Dennis's 4-year-old sister, Sandra, thought nothing of it. For Chapman has four children of his own, including twins Karen and Kevin, about 3.

His role of Santa Claus finished, Chapman returned to duty and presented the convict with pictures showing how Dennis and Sandra had had their Christmas after all. The convict then gave information clearing up a $5000 burglary here and a $10,000 burglary in a nearby town.

Avalanche Kills 4 Swiss.

FIONNAY, Switzerland, Dec. 25 (AP)—Four Swiss workers were killed Christmas eve by an avalanche on Grand Combin mountain. Two other men were dug out only slightly injured. The six were sleeping in a hut on the mountain side when the slide buried them.

9 NURSING HOMES IN COUNTY LACK LICENSES, HEALTH OFFICIAL SAYS

Permits Expected to Be Recommended for All but 3 Operated by Mrs. Alice B. Burgess, Dr. Murphy Asserts.

Nine of St. Louis county's 54 nursing homes are being operated without state licenses, Dr. John C. Murphy, director of chronic disease services for the County Health Department, told the Post-Dispatch yesterday.

However, with the exception of three operated by Mrs. Alice B. Burgess, against whom legal action was started Friday, the Health Department expects to recommend licenses for all the homes as soon as reinspections can be made, Dr. Murphy said.

The six other unlicensed are the Wheaton Home, 8103 Allen avenue, Normandy; Porter Nursing Home in Robertson; Penn Nursing Home, 4411 Carson road, Berkeley; Maryridge Nursing Home, 9353 South Broadway, Lemay; Gravois Rest Haven, Gravois road near Kennerly road, and Hanley Home, 2000 Bellevue avenue, Maplewood.

Wheaton Nursing Home.

Existence of the unlicensed Wheaton Home was discovered last August during a survey by the Health Department, Dr. Murphy said. Before recommending the granting of a license, the department suggested more satisfactory beds, springs and mattresses; repair of the roof, changes in floor covering and additional window space for better light and ventilation.

A reinspection last Wednesday indicated all recommendations had been carried out except a general clean-up of the kitchen and its utensils and the establishment of a better system of records on patients and their medical care. Dr. Murphy said these have been promised. He said another inspection would be made in two weeks and he expressed confidence a license would be recommended for the home, which has eight patients.

One of the complaints which the Health Department said Mrs. Burgess had failed to correct in her two Pine Crest homes in Ballwin and Manchester and Fenton Nursing Home in Fenton was inadequate nursing care for her patients. This inadequacy lay primarily in the lack of sufficient nurses and to a lesser degree in lack of training, he said.

He quoted Mrs. Burgess as saying she has one registered nurse supervising all three homes. This was insufficient, he said, for the types of patients being cared for in the homes. He expressed the opinion that at lease one registered nurse should be assigned to each home.

The practical nurses employed at the homes, while excellent as far as they go, lacked sufficient training to meet the needs of the patients, he said.

Another complaint concerned unsatisfactory electrical wiring at the Ballwin and Fenton homes. Dr. Murphy said reports of electrical inspectors indicated considerable rewiring was needed, particularly at the Fenton home where insufficient wall sockets had resulted in overuse of extension cords. Dr. Murphy, however, did not consider the homes "firetraps." The Manchester home has been rewired at a cost of about $3000, Mrs. Burgess told the Post-Dispatch.

With respect to a complaint against the methods of food handling, Dr. Murphy said present methods are "potentially dangerous" in that they might produce epidemics among the patients.

The main problem, he said, was the lack of cleanliness in

PREMIER TO QUIT UNLESS DEPUTIES GIVE HIM HIS WAY ON PARIS PACTS

French Take Notice of Strong U.S.-British Reaction—Reds Jubilant Over Friday's Action.

PARIS, Dec. 25 (UP)—Premier Mendes-France worked desperately behind the scenes today against time and a tide of anti-German rearmament sentiment in the French National Assembly which could isolate France from its dismayed and angered allies.

The Premier has called for a showdown confidence vote Monday and most political observers believed the reluctant Assembly would reverse its Friday action and approve German rearmament and entry into a new Western European Union.

The outcome was by no means certain.

Western reaction to the Assembly's preliminary rejection of German rearmament hit France a sobering blow, apparent even to the man in the street in the black headlines of the French press.

Most non-Communist newspapers urged the deputies to "live up to their responsibilities" and approve the accords which would put 500,000 West Germans into uniform on the side of the West.

Communist Activity.

The Communists were launching a determined drive to prevent the deputies from reversing their action. From Moscow to party cells in France, the Reds pressed their campaign to smash the WEU in the National Assembly just as the European Defense Community plan was killed there.

The Reds called for demonstrations and a wave of delegations to descend on the Assembly Monday when the deputies return from their Christmas recess.

"Christmas eve was more beautiful, more joyful," declared the Red organ L'Humanite triumphantly.

The Communist-led General Confederation of Labor called on its members to begin organizing "various actions" against the Paris pacts.

In Moscow, the government newspaper Izvestia said Mendes-France would spend his time until Monday "blackmailing" reluctant deputies, and both Izvestia and the Communist party newspaper Pravda accused the United States and Britain of exercising "flagrant pressure" on France to approve the accords.

Reaction in West.

Angry reaction against the Assembly's early rejection came from Washington, London, Bonn and Rome.

The London Foreign Office warned France that West Germany would be rearmed whether France liked it or not, and it was clear that London spoke also for Washington.

Rome newspapers considered a situation in which Western policy would go forward without France, and the Giornale d'Italia said that on Monday "we will know" whether the French "can succeed in overcoming their complexes of inferiority and fear, or whether they prefer the isolation of their country, with all the grave and serious dangers which would accompany such a position."

In their surprise vote Friday, the French deputies approved articles covering the agreement with Germany over the disputed Saar territory and restoration of German sovereignty. But, in their rejection of WEU, they knocked out the core of the whole West European defense plan.

Issues Before Assembly.

There are five separate questions up for vote on Monday but they are grouped under two confidence votes.

One is on German entry into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and on the protocols spelling out that and the WEU. The other is on three amendments to the ratification bills. Mendes-France is accepting one of the amendments and opposing the other two.

If he loses either confidence vote he is out of office.

Only if he wins both of those confidence votes can he demand a second vote on the issue voted on Friday which would have admitted West Germany to the Brussels pact with limited rearmament rights.

However, even if the Assembly does reverse itself and approve rearmament, French officials admitted that much of the damage already has been done to Western solidarity and to the

PRESIDENT PLANS FOREIGN POLICY MESSAGE JAN. 10

He Will Ask New Congress to Adopt Economic Program Rejected Last Year.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Dec. 25 (AP)—President Eisenhower will send his first special message to the new Congress Jan. 10. It will request adoption of his foreign economic policy, which was turned down last year.

In announcing this today, the White House said the President would ask for:

1. A three-year extension of the trade agreements act, based on the principle that "if we wish to sell abroad we must buy abroad." Congress authorized a one-year extension last year.

2. Reorganization and simplification of the customs service.

3. Presidential authority to reduce tariffs up to 5 per cent a year for the next three years, an aggregate of 15 per cent.

4. Creation of an international finance corporation, to work under World Bank auspices, as agreed on at the Rio de Janeiro conference earlier this year.

The President's annual State of the Union message is scheduled to be delivered to Congress Jan. 6. The special message on foreign economic policy, coming four days later, is based mainly on recommendations of the Randall Commission.

With the exception of the proposal for the Latin American finance Corporation, the message is essentially the same one that was sent up on the Hill last year.

Among the things he will ask for again is a law providing preferential tax treatment on income earned through foreign investments, similar to the regulation now in effect for Latin American earnings.

EISENHOWERS SPEND CHRISTMAS QUIETLY IN GEORGIA

AUGUSTA, Ga., Dec. 25 (AP)—The President and Mrs. Eisenhower spent Christmas day quietly at their snug brick house on the Augusta National Golf Course. A round of golf in the balmy Georgia weather was part of his program.

They did not go to church today but will attend Christmas services tomorrow at the Reid Memorial Presbyterian Church.

The Eisenhowers received the press correspondents last night to exchange Christmas greetings, and the President chose the occasion to present his wife with a large group portrait of their three grandchildren as a Christmas gift.

The oil painting, done by Thomas E. Stephens of New York, showed Davis, 6 years old; Barbara Anne, 5, and Susan, 2, in a friendly huddle. Susan is holding a doll.

Mr. Eisenhower is spending a working and golfing holiday here. He arrived Thursday and will return to Washington Jan. 3.

MAN, WIFE TRAPPED 7 HOURS IN UPSET AUTO, SHE DIES

GALLIPOLIS, O., Dec. 25 (AP)—"I screamed for help until my voice was gone."

Thus did Robert Overstreet of Williams Lake, Mich., describe the first seven hours of his Christmas day, 1954, as he and his wife Estelle, also 56 years old, lay trapped in an overturned automobile in a water-filled ditch near here.

Mrs. Overstreet died of exposure and shock on her way to the hospital in an ambulance about 8 a.m. today. The accident occurred about midnight last night.

The hospital said Overstreet is suffering from exposure and shock but is in "good" condition.

Throughout the night-long ordeal Overstreet held his wife's head out of water which seeped into the car from the ditch.

A passing motorist finally discovered the couple shortly after 7 a.m. today and summoned help.

Overstreet told rescuers that he tried kicking out the window after his screams failed to bring aid. He was unable to kick the window out because of the walls of the five and a half-foot deep ditch. Only the wheels of the car were visible over the top of the ditch.

CREW HALTS TRAIN TO GIVE NEEDY FAMILY $118 CHECK

SAUGUS, Calif., Dec. 25 (AP)—For the last few years four farm youngsters have been waving their hands or flashing flashlights at the crew of the crack Southern Pacific train, the Owl, as it sped by their home on the way from San Francisco to Los Angeles.

Today the passenger train slowed down and stopped near their Soledad canyon home 25 miles north of Los Angeles. Engineer H. H. Bock of Los Angeles and fireman Norman B. Cooper of Bakersfield climbed out and gave the children of Mrs. Clara Youngblood ranging in age from 8 to 15, comic books and candy. To ailing Mrs. Youngblood they presented a check for $118 and wishes for a happy Christmas. Bock and Cooper returned to their engine and took their passengers into Los Angeles a few minutes late but with a needy family assured of a merry Christmas.

No Tree for Allergic Boy.

CASPER, Wyo., Dec. 25 (AP)—They took down the Christmas tree in the Carr home last night so 6-year-old Greg could come home. Greg has been staying at his grandmother's house so two brothers, 8-year-old Mike and 3-year-old Brett, could enjoy the tree. He is allergic to Christmas trees.

ARMY PLANNING TO RELEASE MANY DRAFTEES EARLY

Program Will Help Scale Manpower Down to Level Ordered by White House.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP)—The Army plans to release thousands of draftees ahead of schedule next year to carry out the manpower cut ordered by the White House, officials revealed today.

Other steps in the cutback include early release of some reserve officers, extended deferment from active duty of reserve officers training corps graduates, and the already announced reduction in monthly draft calls from 20,000 to 11,000.

President Eisenhower recently ordered a 243,000-man cut in the Army by next summer. This will reduce strength to 1,100,000 men or 73,000 fewer than planned until a few weeks ago. The Army also was ordered to cut out an additional 100,000 by mid-1956, leveling off at 1,000,000.

24 Divisions Unlikely.

Military sources said it is a certainty the Army cannot now man the 24 divisions announced as its goal last Sept. 29. They foresee only 19 or 20 divisions but said the exact number still must be worked out.

Under present plans, all two-year draftees completing 23 months' service next May will be released at that time. Those completing 22 months in June will be released then. This "pre-release" policy will prevail for several months in fiscal 1956, starting next July 1.

From next March to September, the Army also plans to release reserve officers serving their first 24-month tours after they complete only 21 months. Exceptions are chaplains, medical officers and women officers.

Men overseas will be brought home in time for separation under the new schedule.

Remaining cuts will come from "normal attrition"—deaths, retirements, and failure of men to re-enlist.

Some military men and congressional observers predict the cuts will endanger the Administration's proposals for renewing the draft and setting up a military training program aimed at building a 3,000,000-man ready-to-go combat reserve by 1959.

Congress will be considering those programs when the cutback plan is being pushed. The military admittedly will have a hard time justifying the 24-month draft.

No Action on Reserve.

Army circles also are arguing that the Administration gave up an ace in the hole when it ordered the manpower reduction without awaiting congressional action on the reserve plan. Building of a powerful reserve has been advanced as the way to bring down the size of the active forces.

Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson told a press conference last Monday, however, that the cutback and the reserve plan "are separate decisions."

The Navy and Marine Corps were ordered to reduce, respectively, from 692,000 now to 665,000 next June 30 and 650,000 in mid-1956, and from 222,000 now to 205,000 next June 30 and 190,000 in mid-1956.

Only the Air Force continues to build up, from 961,000 now to 970,000 next June 30 and 975,000 in mid-1956.

Guns Heard in Holy Land as Pilgrims Worship Prince of Peace in Bethlehem

BETHLEHEM, Jordan, Dec. 25 (AP)—The birth of Christ was celebrated today at Christendom's oldest shrine, but even Christmas failed to bring peace to the Holy Land.

While an estimated 10,000 tourists and pilgrims gathered near Bethlehem's ancient Church of the Nativity for mass, the crackle of gunfire across the troubled Jordan-Israel frontier drew United Nations truce observers. The shooting was reported on the northern border between the two belligerent neighbors.

First reports indicated the fray was a minor incident with little immediate significance. But it underscored the sharp contrast between war and peace so striking in the Holy Land at Christmas.

There was no interruption, however, to the mass in the Bethlehem church, the traditional site of Christ's birth. It was celebrated with pomp and ceremony, attended by brilliantly-uniformed members of the consular corps and local dignitaries.

After the mass ended in the early hours of Christmas day, the Latin patriarch took the statue of the Infant Jesus from the altar and the procession began from St. Catherine's chapel to the Grotto of the Nativity.

The procession wound through the courtyard of St. Catherine's to the door of the Grotto—a stone-hewn cavern believed to have housed the manger in which Christ was born.

The procession moved down a flight of stone steps to halt before the silver star marking the spot where the manger once stood. The statue of Jesus was first placed on the star, then removed to the nearby crib in the manger, where it will remain till Epiphany.

Historians say the grotto of the Church of the Nativity was pointed out as the site of Christ's birthplace as early as the first century A.D.

The Christmas mass was celebrated this year by Roman Catholic churchmen but Armenian and Greek Orthodox church representatives also attended because they share the care of the shrine with the Roman Catholics.

Elsewhere in the world, Christmas was observed in traditional ways. For the first time in two decades there was no organized major warfare.

At the Vatican Pope Pius XII appeared on his balcony and blessed a crowd of 100,000 gathered below in St. Peter's square.

American soldiers stationed around the world had hearty banquets and special programs for Christmas. And the troops, remembering underprivileged children near their bases, played Santa to thousands with parties and presents.

Cardinal Francis Spellman of New York visited the United States Seventh Division in a tour of Korea's quiet front. The weather in Korea was bitter cold.

For west Europeans, it was the happiest and most prosperous Christmas in many years.

Radio Free Europe penetrated the Iron Curtain with broadcasts of church services from Munich, London and the United States.

CHAOS FACED BY WEST IF FRANCE AGAIN DEFEATS REICH REARMING

Deputies' Rejection of Paris Pact Laid to Fear of Germany, Jealousy of Premier's Predecessors.

By MARQUIS W. CHILDS
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

(Copyright, 1954, The Pulitzer Publishing Co.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25—The French National Assembly has for the second time in less than four months left the Western alliance suspended in midair with the rejection of the London agreement to rearm West Germany in a Western European Union. The European Defense Community treaty was similarly voted down last August.

Premier Mendes-France now has one more chance. On Monday the Assembly will vote on a second reading of the WEU treaty which was worked out to replace the EDC. This time the vote will also be a vote of confidence in the Mendes-France government.

The theory is that the vote of confidence will sober up the Assembly and produce a majority for ratification. In this hopeful view, the Assembly voting on the first reading of the Paris and London agreements felt that there was nothing to lose and so the vote went 280 to 259 against German rearmament.

The Assembly did approve sovereignty for West Germany and the agreement for Europeanization of the Saar, which was part of the package agreed upon at London in September.

Final Action in Doubt.

But no one can be sure what the Assembly will finally do. The 280-259 vote that came early Friday at the end of a bitter and confusing all-night session is reported to have been a stunning shock to the Premier. If the vote on Monday goes against the accords, France and the West will be faced with chaos as Franco-German relations deteriorate in the old pattern of hostility.

There was a feeling close to despair in western capitals when the Assembly turned down EDC at the end of August by a vote of 319 to 264.

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles issued an angry statement denouncing the French action. The "agonizing reappaisal" of American policy in Europe that he had several times threatened seemed at hand with the likelihood that the United States would reach a separate agreement with Chancelleor Adenauer and the Federal Republic of West Germany. This seemed more than a possibility when Dulles on a quick trip to Europe pointedly visited Adenauer at Bonn and Foreign Secretary Eden in London but passed up Paris.

Then in a remarkably short time, and thanks in large measure to Eden, the situation was retrieved. Eden persuaded the British cabinet to commit British troops to the Continent for an indefinite period. With France supposedly reassured to ease its fears of living alone close to the Germans, Mendes-France signed the new agreements.

Gets Saar Agreement.

Moreover, in some hard bargaining he forced Adenauer to accept a plan for the rich industrial area of the Saar that has been widely attacked in Germany. Some observers have feared that the Saar phase of the agreement, in effect confirming French economic domination of the Saarland, would bring about the vulnerable Adenauer's downfall.

One proposal in the night-long session of the French Assembly was to postpone consideration of the accords until it was certain beyond all doubt that the Germans would accept the arrangement for the Saar. Mendes-France won that test, 430 to 181.

In the Christmas interval Dulles and Eden have let it be known that Germany will be armed without France unless the vote against the WEU is reversed. They are well aware that the situation could hardly be retrieved another time. In any event, Dulles and his aids see no way out except to proceed without the French.

Dulles Talks to Envoy.

Late yesterday Dulles talked on the trans-Atlantic ttlephone with Ambassador C. Douglas Dillon in Paris. He was informed by Dillon that while it was possible the vote would be reversed, there was no assurance this would happen.

Dillon, in recent months, has taken a more realistic view of what France would or would not do than some American diplomats. He warned in August that it was most unlikely the assembly would ratify EDC even though some officials with longer experience of the vagaries of French politics were saying that the treaty would surely be approved.

The reaction in Paris to President Eisenhower's strong statement can only be surmised. Enemies of German rearmament may say, as they have said in the past, that France is being dictated to by the United States, but it should serve as a grave warning to responsible elements in the Popular Republican party and among other center groups that France will be left alone.

Perhaps nothing since that old serialized movie thriller, "The Perils of Pauline," has paralleled the series of French post-war crises that have grown more acute with increasing pressure from the West to join with West Germany in some kind of union. French premiers have one after the other put on the same cliff-hanging act while each has assured the United States that France would in the end go along with the other European powers.

Afraid of Germany.

The primary reason for this long and painful series of crises is the old fear of a rearmed and resurgent Germany. In the four-day EDC debate in August the aging Edouard Herriot turned on every emotional appeal to convince the Assembly that the Germans could not be trusted with arms. Again this week he used the same appeals.

He could say with truth that the London-Paris accords provide a form of centralized arms control much less drastic than the kind of integration called for in the supranational army which would have come into being if EDC had been ratified. Under the London agreement, Germany would have a national army subject to limitations on the kind and quantity of arms enforced by the supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Other reasons besides fear may bring about Mendes-France's downfall. Partly because he has been so successful in his first six months in office, he has increased the enmity of those who have failed before him to resolve France's pressing problems. Conspicuous among these enemies is Georges Bidault, former Foreign Minister, and his following in the popular Republican movement.

An Assumption Fails.

Until Friday's vote it had been assumed that when the M.R.P. deputies saw that the accords were in serious danger, they would provide enough votes for the necessary margin of victory. This was based on a two-fold assumption: one, that responsible members of the party such as Robert Schuman would not want to see France left alone in Europe, and two, that Mendes-France's enemies want to see him saddled with responsibility for bringing a German national army into being.

In the test, however, it did not work out that way. Not only did a large number of the Popular Republicans vote against German rearmament but many of the independents and Socialists whose votes had been counted upon for approval of the pact abstained.

For weeks the Premier's enemies have been conducting a vicious whispering campaign against him and certain members of his Government. This represents in part the subterranean currents of clericalism and anti-clericalism that have long been a part of French politics.

Mendes-France is of Jewish origin and his viewpoint is wholly secular. The Popular Republicans are a Catholic party and they have had close ties with Adenauer's Christian Democratic Union, also a Catholic party, in Germany.

No Other Leader.

Even those here who have continued to be skeptical of Mendes-France are frank to admit that they do not see any other political figure or combination of figures who could come close to bringing France into the Western Alliance. It is a great irony, of course, that in August, Mendes-France himself abstained when the vote was taken on EDC and despite repeated taunts refused to state his views on that treaty.

His enemies Thursday night, among them the brilliant but mercurial Paul Reynaud, Deputy Premier in the preceding government, took delight in reminding him of the way in which his own technique was catching up with him.

On the day that France rejected the London-Paris agreement, it was ratified by the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament. Italy had been the other holdout against EDC.

If the final vote is in the negative, France will then literally be alone in Europe.

Some of French Who Opposed Arming Reich Are Alarmed Now

Many of Deputies Who Voted 'No' Expected Treaty to Be Approved, and Are Shocked at Its Defeat.

The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Radio.

PARIS, Dec. 25—The negative vote in the National Assembly on West German rearmament, which was contrary to all predictions, caused shock and alarm even among some of the deputies who voted to kill the treaty bringing the Germans into a new Western European Union.

Deputies of the Popular Republican Movement of former Foreign Ministers George Bidault and Robert Schuman, who formed one of the main groups voting against rearming the Germans, indicated later that they had expected Socialists and many of the nationalist followers of Gen. Charles de Gaulle to vote for the rearmament plan. When many voted against or abstained, the balance tipped against ratification. The vote was 280 to 259.

Socialists and Gaullists had been expected to give the rearmament plan heavy backing because they form a large part of the Assembly backing of Premier Mendes-France, a firm supporter of the West German rearmament plan.

When voting time came after a night of debate, many of the Socialists and Gaullists bolted the Premier in their hatred of any plan to rearm the Germans, or in their desire to see an effort made for an East-West settlement before taking an irrevocable step.

On the second vote, to be taken next week, many of the M.R.P. deputies will abstain, associates of Mendes-France hope. The M.R.P., mainly Catholic, is anxious to maintain close Franco-American ties in defense against the Soviet threat.

Sympathy for Mendes-France may prompt Socialists and Gaullists to change their votes in favor of ratification.

Mendes-France's Radical Socialist (moderate) party, which provided 26 hostile votes and five abstentions out of a total of 76, also is expected to improve its support for the Premier when the life of his government is at stake.

The issue is likely to be close, however, since many unreconciled backers of the old European Defense Community plan, such as former Premiers Paul Reynaud, Rene Plevin, Antoine Pinay and Bidault, feel that West Germany would be so loosely controlled under the new Western European Union plan that it might go over to the Russians eventually to realize its dream of unification.

In the EDC Germany would have been so closely tied to the West that the danger would have been less, these ex-Premiers contend. That, rather than any fear of renewed German armed aggression, is the reason for abstaining, Reynaud insists.

LADEJINSKY'S OLD JOB OPEN TO HIM, BENSON ASSERTS

He Will Have to Meet Government Security Standards, However, Secretary Says.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP) — Wolf Ladejinsky, recently fired as agricultural attache in Tokyo, can have another job in the Agriculture Department—provided he meets the Eisenhower Administration's federal employe security standards.

This was made clear late yesterday by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

Benson, who said he was "deeply concerned" because of an impression that Ladejinsky had been treated unfairly, issued a statement which he said was designed to "clarify the situation in regard to his relationship with the Department of Agriculture."

Ladejinsky was fired despite the fact that he held a security clearance from the State Department which previously controlled the posts of agricultural attache.

'Valuable' 3 Months Ago.

Shortly before Benson issued his statement, a spokesman for the Foreign Operations Administration disclosed that the agency tried to hire Ladejinsky away from the Agriculture Department three months ago only to be told that he was "too valuable" to release.

Benson noted that Ladejinsky left the Agriculture Department four years ago to go to Tokyo, where he was the chief architect of widely-heralded land reforms which were put into effect under Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

He then noted that the new law transferring agricultural attaches from the State to the Agriculture Department "does not provide for any automatic transfer or priority to any personnel in the position of agricultural attache."

Benson pointed out that Ladejinsky formerly was head of the Far Eastern division of the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations in the department, and "under the law has the privilege of returning to that position." His rights to do so "will be respected to the letter of the law any time he wants to exercise them," Benson said.

Now a 'Sensitive' Job.

"However, the position which Ladejinsky had left in the (Agriculture) Department would now be a 'sensitive' position from a security standpoint," Benson said.

"Mr. Ladejinsky's employment in the position would, under the President's executive order 10450 of April 27, 1953, have to be found to be 'clearly consistent with the interests of the national security.'"

Mr. Eisenhower's April 1953 order set up stiff new security tests. It was designed to rid the Government not only of subversives but all other employes whose personality quirks might make them careless with government secrets.

Benson disclosed today that he is seeking competent replacements for Ladejinsky and "other" Agriculture Department attaches who failed to pass department security screenings.

'Good Time for Review.'

Benson said the department is "looking over candidates very carefully, seeking men well trained in American agricultural, production and marketing methods."

"Now," he added, "is a good time to review the whole attache matter."

But, like his security officer, J. Glenn Cassity, Benson did not name attaches, in addition to Ladejinsky, who are deemed unacceptable.

Ladejinsky declined comment today on whether he would seek his old job.

A congressional committee has started looking into the Ladejinsky case. Olin D. Johnston (Dem.), South Carolina, who will head the new Senate Civil Service Committee, said he has instructed staff officials to look into the matter and report to him. Any further action will depend on the preliminary results, he said.

Pope Gives Christmas Blessing To 100,000 From His Balcony

—Associated Press Radiophoto.

POPE PIUS XII stands in window of Vatican balcony yesterday as he gives his Christmas blessing to a crowd in St. Peter's Square.

VATICAN CITY, Dec. 25 (AP)—Pope Pius XII appeared on his Vatican balcony today to give his Christmas blessing to an estimated 100,000 faithful gathered in St. Peter's Square.

It was the ailing Pontiff's first public appearance since his serious collapse Dec. 2.

A roar of "Viva il Papa (Long Live the Pope)" reverberated through the square as the 78-year-old head of the Roman Catholic Church waved from the balcony.

With arms outstretched, the Pope intoned the apostolic blessing as the thousands knelt before him. Loudspeakers sent his voice echoing through the huge square. As in his Christmas radio message to the world yesterday, his voice sounded strong.

He pronounced in Latin: "May the blessing of the Almighty Father, of the Son and of the Holy Ghost descend on you and remain with you always."

Most of the people jamming the square were Italians. But citizens of many other countries, including the United States, waited in the bright sunshine to receive the papal blessing.

The 18-ton master bell of St. Peter's Basilica tolled the noon hour. Exactly on its twelfth stroke, the Pontiff's apartment window opened and the frail, white-clad figure of the Pope appeared.

He lifted his arms in the familiar gesture that millions have seen in ceremonies and audiences during his reign. Providing the best proof yet of his continued improvement from the grave gastric ailment which caused fears for his life earlier this month, the Pope waved his arms vigorously in answer to waves from the throng.

He remained at his apartment window for 3½ minutes. A Vatican prelate said the Pope's private physician and an attendant helped the Pontiff up and down the two steps leading from his window into the balcony. They remained beside him to give support if necessary.

NAVY CLERK FACES LOYALTY REVIEW

Board Will Investigate Charge He Joined Group Listed as Subversive.

DETROIT, Dec. 25 (AP) — Famous Lockett, 31 years old, suspended Navy civilian clerk, will face a three-man naval board in Detroit Monday to answer charges that he is a security risk.

Lockett, an Army veteran, was suspended Nov. 30 from his job as machinery inspector for the Detroit office of the Inspector of Naval Materials.

An anonymous accusation that he was a member of American Youth for Democracy in 1946 while attending Wayne University in Detroit led to the suspension. The organization has been listed as subversive by the United States Attorney General's office.

When Lockett was told he had been suspended he denied the charges.

"It's a lie," he said. "I never was a member' I heard of the group while I was a student, but I didn't join."

Lockett will have the support of his boss when he appears before the board. Capt. W. T. Hart Jr., commander of the Navy Materials Office here, said:

"My knowledge of the case makes me feel that Lockett is a loyal Government employe. I definitely will be a witness in Lockett's behalf."

Hart said he had obtained 1945 and 1946 lists of Wayne students who belonged to the organization but had found no listing of Lockett's name.

Lockett, a divorced father of two children, attended Georgia State College at Savannah, before being drafted in 1943. He said he was given a medical discharge two months later because of a leg condition.

Following his release from the Army, Lockett came to Detroit, spending the war years working in an automobile plant and attending night cisses at Wayne. He aspires to be a pharmacist.

Lockett was hired by the Navy Materials Office in April, 1951. He previously had been an inspector at the Detroit Tank Arsenal.

CROSSING OF THE DELAWARE RE-ENACTED IN COSTUME

WASHINGTON'S CROSSING, Pa., Dec. 25 (AP) — George Washington crossed the Delaware again today in the second re-enactment of America's own Christmas story. The same band of enthusiasts who introduced the fully costumed spectacle last year—hoping to make it an enduring national event — played out anew those dramatic scenes of 1776.

About 3000 persons, many from far away, came to watch many dissimilar talents bring to life an episode in American history which some authorities believe was the turning point in the Revolutionary War.

Woman Is 103 on Christmas.

LIBERTY, Ind., Dec. 25 (AP) —Today, on Christmas, Miss Emmaline Kelly observed her 103rd birthday. She spent the day in the Union county infirmary, where she has lived since 1950, greeting friends and opening presents. What seemed to please her most was the 104 letters and cards she received, including a letter from the White House signed by Mrs. Mamie Eisenhower.

EXECUTIVE BOARD OF BOND ISSUE SCREENING GROUP IS APPOINTED

This Is First Step in Organizing Over-all Body to Study Projects for Proposed $100,000,000 Program.

Appointment of a 14-member executive committee of the Citizens' Bond Issue Screening Committee, to review projects recommended for inclusion in the proposed $100,000,000 public improvement bond issue, was announced yesterday by Sidney Maestre, general chairman of the screening committee.

Maestre, himself appointed recently by Mayor Raymond R. Tucker, said selection of the executive group was the first step in organizing the overall body, on which 250 St. Louisans representing every part of the community will be asked to serve.

Committees formed from the full membership will study proposals in various fields, such as streets and highways and parks and playgrounds, and make recommendations to the executive committee, whose function will be to reconcile proposals with the total amount of bonds the city can afford to issue.

City department heads already have submitted proposals to the Mayor's office, which now is assembling them for submission to the screening committee.

Members of Committee.

Members of the executive committee are:

Mrs. Irvin Bettman Jr., board member, Social Planning Council and member central budget committee of the Community Chest; Donald Danforth, president of Ralston Purina Co. and a vice president of Civic Progress, Inc.; John J. Dwyer, chairman, Democratic City Central Committee; Delmond Garst, regional director, CIO; John L. Gillis, a vice president of Monsanto Chemical Co. and vice chairman, Governmental Research Institute; Aloys P. Kaufmann, former Mayor and president, Chamber of Commerce.

Morton D. May, president, May Department Stores Co. and a vice president of Civic Progress, Inc.; J. W. McAfee, president, Union Electric Co. and a vice president of Civic Progress, Inc.; Charles P. McBride, chairman, Republican City Central Committee.

Powell B. McHaney, president, Civic Progress, Inc., and of the General American Life Insurance Co.; John L. Rollings, president, Missouri Federation of Labor, AFL; Sidney Salomon Jr. of Salomon, Hannegan, Portnoy and Associates, insurance; Clarence M. Turley, president, Clarence M. Turley, Inc., a trustee of the Urban Land Institute and chairman of the Mayor's Commission for Financing New Housing, and Bige Wyatt, president, Wyatt Insurance and Real Estate Co. and executive committee member, Citizens Committee for Home Rule on the Earnings Tax.

Biggest Issue of Generation.

"This proposed bond issue is the most important civic decision to confront St. Louisans of this generation," Maestre said. "The screening process will be organized so that every interested person and group can have a hearing. From the very start, this will be a community-wide effort, a community-wide examination of community needs."

Mayor Tucker, praising the executive committee members for accepting appointment, asserted that "the bond issue proposals that eventually come from the screening committee will represent the best judgment of our most representative citizens as to how our city must be improved. Their decisions will shape the physical future of our city."

Maestre will serve as chairman of the executive committee as well as general chairman. The executive committee will seek advice from the City Plan Commission and from other specialized agencies, both public and private, Maestre said.

NEW CITY VOTERS GET EXTRA TIME TO REGISTER FOR TRANSIT ELECTION

THE Board of Election Commissioners office will be open until 9 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday and until 5 p.m. Saturday, New Year's day, to receive new voter registrations prior to the special election on the Metropolitan Transit Authority.

The election, in which voters of the city and county will approve or disapprove a plan for establishment of the transit authority, will be held Jan. 25.

Because election laws affecting the city require that registrations may be made until 24 days prior to an election, the board said it will keep its office at 208 South Twelfth boulevard open New Year's day.

Transfer of persons now registered but who have moved may be made in person or by mail until next Saturday. Voters who move between Jan. 1 and 15 may appear in person to transfer their registrations before Jan. 15.

THIEVES BELIEVED TO HAVE STARTED FIRE IN CHURCH

A fire which caused damage in excess of $2000 at St. Vincent's Catholic Church, 1427 South Ninth street, is thought to have been started by poorbox thieves, who became angry when they found the boxes had been emptied yesterday.

The blaze was discovered at the rear of the church shortly after 2 p.m., about 20 minutes after the poorboxes had been emptied by a priest. A rack of lighted votive candles had been moved against a wood rear wall, which became ignited. The flames spread to the organ loft before the blaze was discovered, and firemen were called.

Police reported that several poorboxes had been forced open and there was evidence of a hurried search for valuables in the church sacristy. Nothing was reported taken.

Firemen responding to one alarm worked for more than an hour before the blaze was out. Police recalled that a fire starting under similar circumstances was discovered early last week at St. John Nepomuk Catholic Church, 1629 South Eleventh street.

2 YOUTHS HURT WHEN STOLEN TAXICAB PLUNGES DOWN BANK

Two St. Louis youths were injured early yesterday when a stolen taxicab in which they were riding plunged down a 35-foot embankment in the Terminal Railroad yards on the East Side.

Angelo A. Lodato and Thomas Quinn were thrown from the taxicab when it landed on its top. The youths, both 18 years old, were taken to St. Mary's Hospital in East St. Louis for treatment.

They were charged with grand larceny on complaint of William Paul Dunn Jr., who said his taxicab had been stolen from in front of a St. Clair county night club. Lodato, who gave an address in the 1800 block of Benton street, is the son of Angelo Lodato, former convict, who was injured seriously when his automobile was demolished by a bomb in East St. Louis Dec. 16. Quinn lives in the 3500 block of St. Ferdinand avenue.

Citizens' Group Plans Signature Drive for 5 in School Races

500 Mothers to Seek 10,000 Names on Petitions for Each Candidate Backed by Improvement Committee.

A campaign will begin this week to obtain 10,000 signatures on nominating petitions for each of the five Board of Education candidates supported by the Citizens' School Improvement Committee, I. A. Long, committee chairman, announced yesterday.

The drive, with a deadline of Jan. 15, will be conducted by the newly organized mothers' committee of the citizens' group. More than 500 mothers of public school children will participate, Long said.

Candidates backed by the citizens' committee are Oscar W. Gergs, real estate dealer and president of the St. Louis School Patrons Alliance; Mrs. Edward M. Harrington, housewife and former public school teacher; Carl W. Messinger, former teacher and district sales manager, Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp.; Clem F. Storckman, attorney and incumbent School Board member, and Dr. W. A. Younge, Negro physician and member of the St. Louis University School of Medicine faculty.

Plan Set Up by Board.

Long explained the petition drive for these candidates will conform to the plan set up by the Board of Education at its meeting last Thursday.

"We are very happy to have such a group of mothers working in our program of securing a majority on the board whose sole interest is to contribute to the betterment of our St. Louis public school system," Long said.

Mrs. Sherman Landau, 6006 Enright avenue, is chairman of the mothers group and Mrs. David Cook, 6446 Lansdowne avenue, is vice chairman.

Other members of the committee are Mrs. J. H. Beckmeyer, 5739 Etzel avenue; Mrs. Hubert L. Brown, 4043A Page boulevard; Mrs. J. E. Crummie, 5032 Cabanne avenue; Mrs. W. V. Hauser, 5527 Pershing avenue; Mrs. Harry McKinney, 5237A Delmar boulevard; Mrs. Herman Pendleton, 3034 North Twenty-first street.

Mrs. Robert Schneider, 5547 Sutherland avenue; Mrs. Charles C. Segall, 3807 Keokuk street; Mrs. Lamar F. Smith, 4827 Cupples place; Mrs. Eugene Thomas, 4109 Koeln drive; Mrs. William Trogdon, 3952 Lexington avenue; Mrs. Hoyt Wallace, 9933 Riverview boulevard, and Mrs. Francis H. Zeller, 6724 Parkwood place.

Separate Petitions.

Under regulations adopted by the school board at its Thursday meeting, all candidates for the board in the April 5 election must be nominated by petitions. The petitions must carry signatures equal to at least 2 per cent of the vote cast in the preceding general election.

Separate petitions will be circulated by the mothers group for each candidate sponsored by the citizens' committee. Although about 8000 signatures are required for each candidate, the committee will seek to obtain 10,000 for each, in order to have a safe margin.

Attorney General John M. Dalton ruled recently that nominating petitions for School Board candidates no longer are necessary. But he said the board has the right to establish reasonable regulations as to the form in which candidates are filed.

The School Board, acting under this ruling, voted to require nominating petitions, in harmony with provisions of the 1953 Hilsman law making petitions mandatory for independent candidates for municipal and district offices.

4 KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENTS IN ST. LOUIS AREA

Drivers of Two Vehicles Hitting Pedestrians Fail to Stop, One Surrenders.

Four persons were killed in traffic accidents in the St. Louis area Christmas eve and yesterday. Drivers of two cars that struck pedestrians failed to stop, police said, but one surrendered at Clayton early yesterday.

James W. Tanner, 16 years old, a student at Hancock High School, surrendered at the Sheriff's office at Clayton early yesterday and admitted he had driven away after his automobile fatally injured a woman pedestrian in Lemay five hours earlier.

The victim, Mrs. John J. Wehner, 770 Lemay Ferry road, Lemay, died at Lutheran Hospital of fractures of the skull and both legs and internal injuries.

She was 65 years old, and operated a bakery with her husband at the Lemay Ferry road address.

Mrs. Wehner had been to Gethsemane Evangelical Lutheran Church, across the street from her home, and was returning home at the time of the accident. Witnesses said she was a few feet from the curb when struck by a northbound automobile. She was thrown beneath a parked car by the impact.

Youth Appears With Father.

About 1 o'clock yesterday morning, five hours after the accident, the Tanner youth appeared at the Sheriff's Office with his father, Ralph Tanner, 8905 South Broadway.

James Tanner told Deputy Sheriff Marcel Bozon he had just shifted into high gear after making a boulevard stop at Hoffmeister avenue, one block south of the scene of the accident, when Mrs. Wehner ran into the path of his automobile from between two parked cars.

He said he was driving a borrowed automobile and when he applied the brakes found they would not hold until he pumped them. After the accident he became frightened, he said, took a girl companion home and then went to the home of a friend and told the friend what had happened. The friend took him to the Tanner home, and his father then took him to the Sheriff's office.

The youth was released on $1000 bond to answer any charge that may be placed against him.

Edwin Guthrie, 1604 Cass avenue, died yesterday in St. Mary's Hospital at East St. Louis of a head injury suffered about 2:30 a.m. when a truck in which he was riding was struck by an automobile on Illinois Route 157, two miles west of Centerville. The truck driver, Harry V. Eldridge, who lives near Sandy Ridge, also suffered a head injury.

Deputy Sheriff Roy Baur of Centerville said the truck was making a U turn when it was hit by a car driven by Casper Gass, of near Waterloo, Ill.

Found Lying in Street.

Andrew Swierk, 371 East Clarence avenue, was found lying in Third street a short distance south of Carrie avenue late Friday night suffering from skull fractures and internal injuries.

He was dead on arrival at City Hospital. Police said Swierk, 77 years old, apparently was struck by an automobile.

The body was found by John W. Harper, 1031A Sells avenue, who told police he had driven past the scene shortly before 11 o'clock and stopped after hearing a thud. He said a companion reported after alighting that he saw nothing, and they continued on. Returning to the scene about 11:30, Harper saw the body in the street and summoned police, they reported.

After being questioned and after his car was found not damaged, he was released. However, police said they inspected the vehicle again later and booked him suspected of manslaughter after finding human hair and blood on the under side at the rear. Police believe Swierk may have been run over by Harper's car as he lay in the street.

Raymond J. Hoff, 405 West Polk street, Belleville, was killed shortly before midnight Friday when the tractor-trailer he was driving ran off Route 460 about 11 miles west of Nashville, Ill., and went over a small embankment.

Hoff, 45, was trapped in the wreckage, which burned. The scene of the accident is in Washington county about 50 miles southeast of St. Louis.

Traditional Songs, Prayers, Gifts Mark Christmas Observance Here

Star Atop Salvation Army Tree of Lights Glows to Show Achievement of $40,000 Goal.

The spirit of Christmas enveloped St. Louis yesterday, penetrating every walk of life, as the holiday was observed with traditional song and prayer in the churches, exchange of gifts and feasting in homes.

Colored lights glowed on decorated trees both indoors and out—none more brightly than the 400 bulbs and the big star on the Salvation Army tree at Eighth and Olive streets. Each bulb signified a $100 contribution, and the star signaled achievement of the $40,000 goal.

Part of the money will be used to pay for the Christmas dinner served yesterday to 800 homeless men at the Harbor Light Center and to a number of invalids in their homes. The Salvation Army also distributed dinner checks to needy families, 3500 gift boxes to service men overseas, toys to children of the poor and gifts to hospital patients.

Shriners entertained crippled children at Shriners' Hospital yesterday with a program of carols.

Meanwhile, 50,000 carolers who made their rounds Christmas eve to raise funds for organizations serving children in need were taking a well-earned rest.

The Yuletide spirit penetrated the city jail, where 350 inmates feasted on turkey. The jail's church service was jammed, and everyone who attended received two packages of cigarettes.

Meteorologically speaking, it was not a perfect Christmas—there was not a smidgen of snow—but the weatherman did the next best thing by serving up a bright sun and temperatures that, while brisk enough to permit wearing of gift jackets, scarves and gloves, were not too low to prevent immediate tryout of new bicycles and roller skates.

Things were quiet at Union Station, Lambert-St. Louis Field and the bus terminals, the holiday travel rush having subsided until the back-to-school movement gets under way. The mountains of mail had been sorted out and delivered, and post offices were closed.

Churches will conclude their three-day celebration of Christmas with a full schedule of Sabbath services today. Many Protestant churches will receive new members at communion services.

BOY BORN TO GROVE COUPLE WHOSE 3 SONS DIED IN FIRE

A fourth son was born in Boston Thursday to Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Grove III, former St. Louisans, whose three young sons died Dec. 15 in a fire which swept their ocean-front home at Northport, Me. The birth, at an undisclosed hospital, was announced by the mother's physician.

Grove, heir to a patent medicine fortune, and his wife were in Boston awaiting arrival of the new baby when the early morning fire, apparently caused by an oil heater explosion, occurred. The caretaker and housekeeper for the Groves, Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Beans, also perished.

The boys who died were Edwin W. Grove IV, 8 years old; David A., 7, and Jeoffrey, 4. The Groves moved from St. Louis four years ago and lived in Aspen, Colo., until last September when they moved to Maine.

NO HOLIDAY MERCY SHOWN TO SPEEDERS

Police Radar Patrols Carrying Out Drive to Save Lives.

St. Louis traffic policemen continued their relentless pursuit of errant motorists last night under instructions to throw holiday sentiment out the window. There will be no brakes applied to the traffic drive this year, no forgiveness of violators, no torn up tickets, they said.

"Don't get the idea we like being cast in the role of Scrooges," Maj. William G. Cibulka, head of the triffic division, told the Post-Dispatch. "But the drinking season is on, there are a lot of crazy drivers and we want to save some lives."

Cibulka said 108 speeders were arrested in the 24-hour period ending at 7 a.m. yesterday compared with an average of 75 for 24 hours. Eighty-four speeding automobiles were picked up on the screens of three roving radar cars, most on Christmas eve. They were being driven up to 60 miles an hour on streets where the legal speed limit is 30.

"Radar patrols will continue in action each night this week from 6 p.m. to 3 a.m.," Cibulka said. "They will work right on into the New Year. We lost one life Christmas eve but I believe the number of accidents was down."

WARNING AGAINST DUMPING CLEANING FLUID INTO SEWERS

Owners of cleaning establishments will have their attention called to an ordinance prohibiting the dumping of cleaning fluid into the city's sewer system, Director of Public Safety Joseph P. Sestric announced yesterday.

The action resulted from the concern felt Friday in the downtown area after a strong odor, which turned out to be caused by a cleaning fluid, was reported 62 times in the area bounded by Clark avenue and Olive street, Twelfth boulevard and Sixth street. The Fire Department received that many calls from persons who said they thought the odor indicated gas leaks.

Investigation by city officials and firemen revealed the cause was non-explosive cleaning fluid, which firemen flushed out of the sewers with hose streams. A warning that the dumping of cleaning fluid in sewers is illegal has been issued, with the suggestion the fluid be placed in containers and hauled away to be burned.

FATHER OF 6 WHO LOST HANDS GETS $1600 FROM WORKERS

Henry DeGonia, father of six children, who lost both hands as a result of an accident three weeks ago at the Chevrolet frame division of A. O. Smith Corp., Granite City, has received $1600 contributed by employes.

His hands were crushed in a huge press which stamps out automobile frames. More than 2000 persons work at the plant.

DeGonia, a patient at St. Elizabeth Hospital, Granite City, was able to spend Christmas with his family. He lives at 404 Kirkpatrick Homes, Granite City.

DAMAGE CLAIMS OF $138,000,000 FOR 2 HURRICANES

The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 — The two hurricanes, Carol and Edna, which struck New England areas last Aug. 31 and Sept. 11 respectively, inflicted total property damage in excess of $138,000,000 involving 745,000 damage claims, it was announced today by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

The damage estimates do not include automobile or marine losses. Nor do they include the total estimated damage of hurricane Hazel, which swept over 10 states from South Carolina to the Canadian border on Oct. 15, inflicting losses approximately as great as the previous two hurricanes.

J. Victor Herd, president of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, said damage claims resulting from the three storms will total highest amount of insurance payments ever made, exceeding even the payments for the San Francisco fire and earthquake of 1906. Herd said the insurance companies paid about $220,000,000 in claims following the San Francisco disaster. The previous high windstorm losses occurred during the storm of Nov. 25, 1950, which resulted in $188,000,00 being paid to policy holders.

SHEPPARD SAYS HIS PROSECUTORS HID EVIDENCE

Asserts 'Proof' That Someone Else Was in His Home Was Withheld in Trial.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 25 (AP)—Dr. Samuel H. Sheppard contended today that county prosecutors concealed evidence favorable to him during his murder trial.

The 30-year-old osteopath, convicted last Tuesday of second-degree murder in the bludgeoning of his wife, wrote out a statement that was given by a brother to the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In the statement Dr. Sheppard, who was sentenced to life imprisonment but eligible for parole in 10 years, declared: "Total disregard of definite evidence that proved the presence of someone else in our house who must have killed Marilyn stirs and depresses me."

During his almost 10-week long trial, Dr. Sheppard maintained that an intruder entered his comfortable lakefront home last July 4 and clubbed his 31-year-old pregnant wife to death. The prowler twice knocked him unconscious during ensuing struggles, he testified.

Cites Prosecutor's Duty.

Dr. Sheppard said in the statement that a prosecuting attorney "was duty bound to produce all evidence and protect the innocent as well as prosecute the guilty. This has been far overlooked," he added.

He said certain evidence definitely pointed to the presence of an outsider. He said these included fibers found under his wife's fingernails, a fragment of leather and a human tooth chip both found under her bed, and a cigarette butt in an upstairs toilet.

The state denied he had suffered a spinal cord injury, Dr. Shepard said, until certain injuries were noted in trial testimony, and then the prosecution argued that he "dove over the landing of the beach house" in a suicide attempt.

"Is that story by the prosecuting attorney not much more fantastic than the memory I have for the events that actually happened (dazed and injured)?" Dr. Sheppard asked.

'No Mystery Novel.'

"I don't know if the jurors expected my relation of the events to sound like a mystery novel or not, but a man who has been knocked senseless twice cannot describe associated events with clarity."

"How these facts plus testimony in regard to a person in the area of our home the a.m. of July 4 was overlooked is beyond my understanding of unbiased evaluation," he said.

Sheppard is being held at the county jail pending a hearing Thursday on a motion by his attorneys for a new trial.

By International News Service

Dr. Sheppard dined on turkey today as he spent his first Christmas behind bars at the Cuyahoga county jail. He joined 399 other prisoners in a Christmas meal. Each was given a stocking containing an apple, an orange, nuts and sweets.

Meanwhile his brothers, their children and his 7-year-old son, Chip, gathered at the home of the eldest brother, Dr. Richard Sheppard, for a Christmas dinner.

The brothers — Dr. Richard and Dr. Stephen — visited the neurosurgeon yesterday and took him several presents. No visitors are admitted on Saturdays.

Nineteen persons visited the convicted osteopath yesterday. Sheriff Joseph Sweeney reported that Dr. Sheppard has received more than 100 letters, Christmas cards and telegrams since his conviction Tuesday.

MENDES-FRANCE FACES SHOWDOWN VOTE ON MONDAY

hope for a reconciliation with Germany. It cannot be undone simply by the reversal of the vote by a small, grudging majority.

French diplomats also were aware that the National Assembly's action would make France the continuing target of Moscow's th eats, blandishments and propaganda to split the Western alliance on the German question. They believed it would weaken Mendes-France's attempts to lead the way to a Big Four conference, even if he manages to stay in office.

Eisenhower and Dulles Confer on France.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Dec. 25 (UP)—President Eisenhower interrupted his quiet observance of Christmas today to confer again with Secretary of State Dulles by telephone concerning the French stand on German rearmament.

The traveling White House staff declined to discuss the telephone conference except to say that it concerned France.

Dulles, who is in Washington, probably relayed to the President latest reports from the United States embassy in Paris on the French Chamber of Deputies vote scheduled for Monday.

There were no plans at the moment for Dulles to come to Augusta where Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower are spending the holidays. The White House said they would remain "in very close touch." If the French vote Monday goes against the German rearmament plan, the President may ask Dulles to come here for a conference.

Dulles and the President conferred by telephone twice yesterday.

A Real Christmas Surprise

—By a Post-Dispatch Photographer.

MRS. MARY ELLEN BURNETT, popular elevator operator at Barnes Hospital, registers genuine amazement as Red Cross Gray Ladies greet her with a wheelchair and hamper loaded with food and other gifts in a Christmas eve surprise. JOSEPH BIERNACKI FUNERAL SERVICES TO BE TOMORROW

Funeral services for Joseph Biernacki, gardener in charge of the formal gardens on Government Hill in Forest Park for 35 years, will be at 9 a.m. tomorrow at St. Albert's Catholic Church, 5730 Woodland avenue. Burial will be in Calvary Cemetery.

Mr. Biernacki, 81 years old, died of cancer Friday at his home, 5461 Plover avenue. The gardens on Government Hill, which include an illuminated fountain, have attracted national attention. A native of Poland, he came to St. Louis at the age of 19 and had been an employe of the city's parks for 45 years until retirement last January.

Surviving are a son, Phillip Biernacki, and a daughter, Mrs. Theodore Koziatek.

ROBBED OF $136 ON STREET

Mrs. Amy M. Gerlach, 4919 Natural Bridge avenue, reported she was robbed of her purse containing $136 early yesterday at North Kingshighway and Terry avenue.

She told police a Negro youth approached her from the rear, cut the shoulder strap on the purse and fled with it. She was not injured.

HER SMILE WINS YULE SURPRISE FOR HOSPITAL WORKER

Mrs. Mary Ellen Burnett, Barnes Hospital elevator operator, whose smile and kindly manner have endeared her to patients, visitors and fellow-employes, had a real Christmas eve surprise as she went off duty.

Red Cross Gray Ladies greeted her at the elevator door with a wheel chair and hamper loaded with a beef roast, groceries, clothing and a quantity of money.

Tears of happiness welled in the eyes of the 37-year-old widow.

"I just can't get over it — you're all too wonderful," was about all she could say.

Mrs. Burnett, who lives at 4340 Labadie avenue, with her two sons—one of them a Sumner High School senior—and small daughter, had been featured as the "personality of the month" in the December issue of the hospital's publication, "Hospital Record."

Employed at the hospital since June 1952, Mrs. Burnett says she enjoys her work immensely because "I like people and my job gives me an opportunity to talk with them."

GASOLINE PRICE WAR CONTINUING ON THE EAST SIDE

East Side gasoline stations, late starters in the three-month St. Louis area price-cutting war, still advertised their wares at reduced prices yesterday. On the Missouri side of the river the prices were back to normal.

Operators of East St. Louis and Belleville stations, whose price schedules are fixed by bulk distributors, speculated that the war had failed to end for them because one East St. Louis outlet was selling gas at a lower rate than was ever reached in St. Louis.

The outlet, a department store which handles gasoline products on the side, was selling regular gas for 15 cents and premium for 18. Stations handling major oil company products were selling regular gas at 20.9 and premium at 23.9. Most city and county stations on this side were back to 26.9 and 29.9.

Pressure caused by the St. Louis price-cutting competition has been felt in a 100-mile radius of the city as stations on the edge of the war's perimeter kept lowering charges. East Side operators were harder hit because they must absorb a 5-cent state tax compared with a 3-cent Missouri tax. St. Louis stations also pay a 1-cent city tax.

Unionist Joseph Mullaney Dies.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)—Joseph A. Mullaney, veteran labor leader, died today after a long illness. He was 83 years old. He had been international president of the AFL Association of Heat and Frost Insulators and Asbestos Workers since its beginning in 1912, and first vice president of the New York State Federation of Labor since 1910.

TRANSIT UNIONS SEEK TO ESCAPE NO-STRIKE ACT

Campaign Begun to Amend King-Thompson Labor Law on Public Utilities.

By HERBERT A. TRASK
State Political Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

Legislation to exempt transit companies and their employes' unions from compliance with the King-Thompson no-strike law, will be sought in the forthcoming session of the State Legislature, the Post-Dispatch was told yesterday.

The new attack on the state's controversial utility labor disputes act is being backed by various Missouri locals of the AFL streetcar and bus operators union, and by the AFL State Federation of Labor.

Their bill, prepared for introduction after the 1955 Legislature convenes Jan. 5, would amend the King-Thompson law by striking "transportation" companies from the list of privately and publicly-operated utilities subject to the law.

No Other Changes.

No other changes would be proposed. The law, if amended, would continue to cover other specific utilities, including those which furnish electricity, water, gas, heat, steam, sewer and communication services to the public.

The King-Thompson law, enacted in 1947, is designed to protect the public against loss of essential services as a result of labor disputes or work stoppages in utilities. It empowers the Governor to seize and operate utilities in the name of the state whenever a strike or lockout is threatened or occurs.

Recently, state legislators received letters from a Kansas City labor leader urging them to support the bill to exempt transit utilities from the law. The letters were sent by Loren Hargus, president of Division 1287, AFL Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America.

Contending application of the King-Thompson act in the transit industry had been a failure, Hargus charged the no-strike law had created a "legal mess" which has jeopardized public protection and the rights of employes.

Hargus argued that transit operations have no affect on public health and welfare, which are cited as justification for the King-Thompson law.

No Longer Monopolistic.

The transportation industry, he said, is no longer monopolistic because of the use of private automobiles, "riding groups" and other forms of transportation outside the local transit system. It is labor's position that a halt in transit service may cause some inconvenience, but it does not affect the public health and welfare.

Hargus also charged that state seizure and operation of the Kansas City Public Service Co. from April 30 to Dec. 11, 1950, had "disastrous" results. During that period, he said, the company refused to pay workmen's compensation claims, and refused to pay an estimated $500,000 in injury and damage claims growing out of accidents in the operation of streetcars and busses.

He pointed out that the Missouri Supreme Court, in split decisions, upheld a ruling of Cole county circuit court in a test case that neither the company nor the state was liable for damages resulting from accidents during the period of state operation.

Court's Rulings.

The circuit court ruled the company was not responsible because, technically, its properties were being operated by the state. It held the state was not liable because it had not consented to being sued.

Division One of the Supreme Court affirmed the ruling early this year. Later, the case was transferred to the court en banc, which also upheld the ruling in a 4-to-3 split decision. Since then, the court en banc has reheard the case, and a third Supreme Court decision is awaited.

After the initial court rulings, Hargus said, persons with accident claims filed damage suits against the Kansas City streetcar and bus operators who were involved in the accidents. Some employes settled minor claims, he said, but other personal claims involving up to $10,000 are still pending.

"Grossly Unfair."

The Kansas City labor leader declared the King-Thompson law was proved "grossly unfair" to employes, and left a doubt as to whether the public, including transit riders, have any protection as to injuries and damages sustained during state operation of a transit utility.

He also charged there can be no real collective bargaining between a utility and its employes under these circumstances, which give the company an advantage if the state takes over technical operation of its streetcars and busses and it is not held liable for injuries and damages.

The state seizure provisions of the King-Thompson act also were invoked late in 1950 when labor difficulties threatened to suspend operations of the St. Louis Public Service Co.

In that instance, the St. Louis transit company regarded state seizure and operations as a "fiction." It continued to operate on a corporate basis, paid its workmen's compensation claims and social security on its employes, and handled accident claims in the usual manner.

Labor Opposition.

Organized labor in Missouri vigorously opposed enactment of the King-Thompson law, and has unsuccessfully attempted to have the act repealed or amended drastically. The Legislature has turned back such efforts because the law generally has strong public support throughout the state.

The transit unions, however, believe they can get the law amended to exclude them and their employers because of their experience. Their bill is likely to have a rough road to travel, however, as supporters of the act are certain to view this as labor's opening wedge for ultimate repeal of the law.

Missouri labor leaders are citing a report made by a special New Jersey commission, which this year recommended repeal of that state's utility labor disputes act. The Missouri law was based on the New Jersey statute.

MANAGER OF COUNTRY CLUB

Ray G. McGrath, former manager of the De Soto and Forest Park hotels, has been appointed manager of Westborough Country Club, it was announced yesterday.

William Carmody, chairman of the house committee of the club, said McGrath would assume his new duties next Saturday. He is a former president of the Hotel Association of St. Louis.

U.S. and Britain Reported Ready To Rearm Reich Without France

Officials Indicate Paris Government Could Come In Later if It Won Support of Assembly.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (AP) —The United States and Britain were reported ready today to consult immediately on how to rearm West Germany without France should the French Assembly uphold on Monday its initial rejection of the Allied plan.

There was no word on whether Secretary of State John Foster Dulles would fly to London if such consultation becomes necessary, whether Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden would come to Washington, or whether diplomatic channels would suffice.

In any event, it was apparent that the United States and Britain, acting in close harmony, had shifted from a state of shocked surprise to grim determination that, with or without France, Germany was going to be rearmed as a soverign member of the Western alliance.

The surprise was evident in expressions yesterday of United States and British leaders after the French Assembly, perhaps even surprising itself, voted against the London-Paris agreement to rearm Germany within the Western European Union created under the 1948 Brussels pact.

U. S., British Comment.

President Eisenhower, in a statement from his holiday headquarters at Augusta, Ga., called this a matter "of the utmost seriousness." The British Foreign Office, in a statement which United States officials emphatically indorsed, declared the issue is "not whether the German federal republic will rearm, but how."

In the wake of these statements, officials let it be known this rearming might be undertaken without French participation. This concept, generally ascribed to British Prime Minister Churchill, leaves the strong implication that France could come in later at any time a French government could win enough support.

The diplomatic channels for a reversal of the French Assembly's vote against rearming Germany were being kept open.

President Eisenhower, who talked by telephone with Dulles twice yesterday, conferred with him again for 15 minutes today. Dulles has been in contact by trans-Atlantic telephone with United States Ambassador C. Douglas Dillon at Paris, and Dillon has been talking to French Premier Mendes-France. Likewise, British Ambassador Sir Roger Makins, in close touch with London, spent some time yesterday at Dulles's home.

Won't Permit Veto.

The line being taken by United States and British officials is that France will not be allowed to veto a happily-timed opportunity to rearm Germany as a part of the West. But these officials are trying to counter any criticism from the Communists—such as Tass's catcall that "crude and flagrant" pressure was being brought on the French assembly. So far there has been no official Soviet reaction, probably pending Monday's outcome in the Paris Parliament.

Backing up the United States-British feeling that this is the time to rearm Germany—while such a friendly hand as that of Chancellor Konrad Adenauer is at the helm in Bonn—is a conviction that the French assembly really wants a rearmed Germany. While agreed in principle, the Assembly has split over details: first on the rejection earlier this year of the European Defense Community and now on the Paris agreement.

While determined to go ahead without France, United States and British officials are not inclined to write off France lightly. Unlike the situation during the EDC crisis, there is no strong talk of dire consequences. The London-Paris agreements were the miracle that saved Western unity after EDC was killed. There is no alternative to these in sight, but officials emphasized they will go ahead with an "empty chair" which France could occupy whenever the assembly gets back in line.

This would mean the ascendency in France of a leader who could do what Mendes-France thus far has failed to do. No such leader is in sight now.

Effect on Congress.

One important aspect of the situation was the effect of the French action on Congress. France must have Allied help in United States dollars to fulfill its commitments in such places as Indochina and North Africa. Congress is bound to look carefully at requests for grants of aid to France in the light of the Assembly's wobbling on rearming Germany. Of course, should the rejection be upheld, the effect might be disastrous from the standpoint of future American aid.

The Eisenhower Administration was reported to have decided definitely against calling up the German rearmament treaty in the United States Senate until both France and Germany have completed action.

Of the documents involved, the Senate must ratify only two —the protocol which ends the occupation and grants West Germany its sovereignty, and the agreement admitting Germany to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Another of the agreements would permit United States troops to remain in West Germany, but this is understood to fall within the commander-in-chief powers of the President, and thus apparently will not require Senate ratification.

MRS. RUDOLPH HOFMEISTER FUNERAL SERVICE TOMORROW

Private funeral services for Mrs. Rudolph Hofmeister, former High School teacher and widow of a retired physician, will be at 10 a.m. tomorrow at Lupton undertaking establishment, 7233 Delmar boulevard, University City. Entombment will be in Valhalla Mausoleum.

Mrs. Charles V. Harlam was found stretched across a couch at her home, shot through the head. The baby sitter, 14-year-old Freddie W. Rader, was dead in a rocking chair, also shot through the head.

EXPLOSION OF FEED STORE INJURES THREE IN DENVER

DENVER, Dec. 25 (AP) — A dawn explosion broke the Christmas calm in Denver today, demolishing a feed store, damaging three other buildings, breaking windows over a wide area and injuring three persons.

The injured, all living in the neighborhood, were cut by flying glass. They were Mrs. Christine Coupland, 83 years old; Donna Fabrizio, 18, and her sister, Barbara, 16.

Chunks of concrete from the one-story building were hurled 200 yards into the South Platte river and heavy beams were pitched into telephone wires.

Franklin Soper, assistant fire chief, said escaping natural gas apparently filled the store and caused the blast.

3 MORE SOUGHT IN UNION MURDER PLOT INQUIRY

Charged With Conspiracy to Kill Seafarers Leader, Including Rival for Job.

HACKENSACK, N.J., Dec. 25 (AP)—Police in three states are pushing their investigation of an alleged plot to murder AFL Seafarers' Union officer Paul Hall.

Ray White of Tampa, Fla., who is running against Hall for the $28,000-a-year job as secretary-treasurer of the union, called the plot "just a big smear" yesterday after being released in Tampa on $3000 bail on a charge of conspiracy to commit murder.

White said "union politics" were behind the case. He said he believed Hall "rigged" the plot to discredit him. He said Hall could use the charge to have him brought before a union committee and expelled from the union.

Three other men, including the self-confessed triggerman, James E. Cobb, of Tampa, also have been charged with conspiracy. Police said the group probably included at least three other men, who are sought.

Had Shotgun in Auto.

The gunman, Cobb, alias Frank Green, was arrested Thursday night when he approached Hall's home in nearby Montvale with a loaded shotgun in his car.

Bergen County Prosecutor Guy Calissi said he had been informed that an attempt would be made to kill Hall, the secretary-treasurer of the Atlantic and Gulf Coast district of the International Seafarers' Union.

The prosecutor says Cobb said that White had promised him $15,000 to kill Hall and $2000 of it had been paid.

The other arrests followed the statement by Cobb, an unemployed seaman.

Edward Taffe of West Milford, N.J., is being held in Bergen county jail on conspiracy charges, and Carmen Priore of New York City is under arrest there as a fugitive to face the New Jersey conspiracy charge.

The prosecutor said Taffe, 65, "cased" Hall's home and was to help Cobb in his getaway. Taffe has denied knowledge of the plot.

Priore, a salesman, is the man who introduced Cobb to Taffe, the prosecutor said.

Calissi's first assistant, Fred Galda, will go to Tampa tomorrow to question White and others.

Heads Tampa Labor Group.

White, 37, is president of the AFL Central Trades and Labor Assembly in Tampa. The election in which he is running against Hall started Nov. 15 and is scheduled to end Jan. 15.

White said he intends to continue his campaign for the post of secretary-treasurer in the union, which numbers 60,000 members in the nation's coastal and Gulf ports. He added, however, that the charges had hurt his chances.

Hall, who lives in Montvale with his wife, Rose, and two young children, has been a leader in the fight to rid East Coast waterfront unions of racketeers.

3-CAR ACCIDENT BELIEVED TO HAVE CAUSED DROWNING

LEVITTOWN, N. Y., Dec. 25 (AP)—A three-car accident early today resulted in the death of one man, apparently by drowning.

The victim was Joseph Fannon, 29 years old, of New York City. His car, driven by his wife Muriel, went through a link fence, down an embankment and into a drain sump. Water closed over the roof of the car and Fannon apparently was drowned.

Mrs. Fannon was thrown clear before the car went through the fence.

Police said a car, stopped to make a left turn, had been hit from behind by a second car and shot across the road into the Fannon automobile, throwing it out of control.

REPORTS HOLDUP MAN STOLE $800, OUTRAN HIM IN CHASE

Leo S. Guccione, secretary-treasurer of the National Food Distributing Co., 1121 North Twelfth street, reported he was circumstanced late Thursday by a robber who ran away after taking $800 from Guccione at the point of a revolver.

Guccione told police he started to leave his office and returned for a forgotten package when a Negro armed with a revolver held him up.

The robber took Guccione's wallet, containing the money, and ran north in Twelfth street with his victim in pursuit. He turned west in Biddle street and got away, Guccione reported.

SWEDISH STEAMER MISSING IN STORM RADIOS IT IS SAFE

LONDON, Dec. 25 (UP) — A Swedish steamer missing since Thursday with 20 men aboard in storms battering northwest Europe radioed today that it was safe with all hands off the Island of Sylt.

Deaths attributed to the storms mounted above 150.

Snow after four days of gales and heavy rain dotted the Continent, but brought fears of possible avalanches in the Alps.

Icy highways in eastern France caused motorists to abandon scores of cars when temperatures dropped below freezing.

9 County Nursing Homes Lack Licenses, Officials Say

the handling of plates and utensils and in the preparation of food. He said the Health Department had recommended a three-compartment washing process that would wash, rinse and sterilize chemically in separate steps. Only the home at Ballwin followed this procedure at the time of last inspection, he said.

Toilet and bathing facilities were considered inadequate in number or insanitary, he said, although Mrs. Burgess is adding a new shower and toilet room to the Manchester home, stating it would be ready in the spring.

At the Ballwin home, eight men, housed in a separate dormitory, are dependent on an outside privy about 50 feet from the building. Men patients at the Fenton home complained of the lack of toilet facilities on the second floor.

Other complaints concerned lack of approved fire escapes. The stucco building at Manchester has two wooden outside stairways from the second floor and two interior staircases. The frame home at Ballwin has one outside metal fire escape and two inside stairways. The brick portion of the Fenton home has two inclosed inside stairways that were assigned a fire-resistant rating of two hours but the frame portion has only one inside staircase and it is not inclosed.

Dr. Murphy said Mrs. Burgess's difficulties, apparently stemmed from the fact that she accepted some patients who had been turned down by other homes for lack of sufficient ability to pay. A number of her patients are entirely dependent on their old-age assistance of $55 a month.

"You can't care for a bed patient on this amount," he said. Mrs. Burgess's attempts to do so have put a strain on her operations, he said, and he expressed the opinion that her financial condition is the reason for her failure to comply with all recommendations made by the Health Department.

The license of the Porter Home for Negroes expired last May 31 but because of the Health Department's heavy work load an inspection was not made until July 14, Dr. Murphy said.

At the present time, the only thing holding up a recommendation for relicensing is the provision of a more adequate system of recording medical treatment given patients, he said.

But the Department also is suggesting repair of screens, general cleaning, installation of a guard gate at the top of the stairs and provision of additional storage space for kitchen supplies.

"When the corrections we deem essential have been made, we will recommend the place be relicensed and we have been promised co-operation," Dr. Murphy said.

In serving as the inspection agency for the State Division of Health, the County Health Department seeks to help operators bring their homes up to standards required by the state unit, Dr. Murphy said.

"We try to be helpful and not punitive because we realize the real need that exists for these homes and we do not want to close any of them except as a last resort," he said. "If they show any evidence of co-operation, we are willing to work with them and give them time to carry out our recommendations."

Condition of Other Homes.

The remaining unlicensed homes were described by Dr. Murphy as generally good homes with only minor corrections required. He expressed confidence they would be recommended for licenses upon reinspection.

Typical of the recommended improvements were the keeping of better medical records, provision of waterproof covers for mattresses, additional bed pans and facilities for cleaning and disinfecting them and installation of a protective gate at the top of a stairway.

In addition to the six homes awaiting reinspection, two others are now in process of inspection. Another four were approved for licenses last Wednesday.

Of the 39 that now have licenses, 18 received them since September and the remaining 21 were inspected during or prior to the Health Department survey of last summer, Dr. Murphy said.

He estimated 1900 patients were being cared for in the 54 homes now in operation.

There are 230 patients in the three homes which Prosecuting Attorney Stanley Wallach is attempting to close in a suit filed Friday.

Defendants in Suit.

Defendants in the suit are Mrs. Burgess and her mother, Mrs. Ella B. McDonald, as well as the owners of real estate on which the Pine Crest Home in Ballwin is located.

In asking for both temporary and permanent injunctions against their operation because of failure to comply with recommendations of the County Health Department as prerequisites for licensing, Wallach said he would not ask the court to issue an order to show cause against the defendants.

This procedure, which is customary in injunction suits where prompt relief of a situation is desired, will not be followed because there are no facilities for taking care of the patients if the homes were suddenly closed, Wallach said.

Special Designs Urged.

Designing of structures intended specifically to be used as nursing homes was urged last night by Frank C. Roe, county public works director, as the ideal solution of our age's growing problem of care of the elderly.

Within the last year, he said, his office has received about 20 unsuccessful applications for permits to convert old residences into nursing homes. Each time the proposed building failed to meet code requirements, he explained.

"There is now apparently a real need for nursing homes," he said, "but remodeling of some of the structures suggested could prove more costly and less satisfactory than erecting the right kind of building in the first place."

DEMOCRATS PLAN TO ATTACK G.O.P. OVER PATRONAGE

Civil Service Policies Also to Be Investigated —'Security Risks' May Be Reviewed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP)—Democrats in the new Congress plan to aim some of their biggest investigative guns at President Eisenhower's patronage and civil service policies.

This may mean an all-out review of the entire federal employe and security risk programs, party spokesmen said today. Out of it may come moves to tighten the civil service laws.

The Democrats are determined to get the facts, if they can, on what many consider loose Republican charges in the recent election campagn about the number of "security risks" they removed from the federal payroll.

But a companion target will be Republican efforts to replace Democrats with Republicans in many jobs previously protected by civil service.

Monroney's Comments.

Senator A. S. Mike Monroney (Dem.), Oklahoma, who is being mentioned as chairman of an investigating subcommittee on civil service policies, said he thinks the Senate Civil Service Committee must find out if the "jobs for deserving Republicans" program "violates the letter as well as the spirit of the law."

"The morale of Government employes has never been lower because of the Administration's policy of political firings," he told a reporter.

He accused the Post Office Department of "harassing" Democratic postmasters and finding filmsy grounds to fire them.

"It's gotten so bad that the Post Office inspectors are almost an arm of the Republican national, state and county committees," he said.

Senator Olin D. Johnston (Dem.), South Carolina, prospective chairman of the Civil Service Committee, also has complained publicly about Administration ousting of Democratic postmasters and deputy United States marshals.

Another Democrat, Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota told reporters that "civil service is being chipped away. It is a tradition revered by Republicans, but not practiced." He said "the Administration took the deputy marshals out of civil service, although the Hoover commission (on government reorganization) recommended they be under it."

Provisions for Routine Jobs.

He said deputy marshals "ought not to be patronage jobs. Either you have a civil service merit system or you don't. Of course, any new Administration should have control of the policy-making positions, but the routine, technical or law enforcement jobs should be under the merit system and should not be tampered with."

Johnston is expected to name a subcommittee to study the "jobs for G.O.P." program and also the charges of "political firings."

The full committee itself is considered likely to dig into what the Democrats call the "numbers game"—employe firings on loyalty and security grounds.

Monroney said employe morale in some departments is so bad that the foreign service, for example, is "desperate" to get qualified recruits. He said the situation is so serious that Congress this year had to permit hundreds of civil service workers to transfer to the foreign service to keep the latter adequately manned.

Russia Lists Pitfalls of 'Isms' That Ensnare Soviet Authors

Writer Who Avoids All of Them May Reach Red Heaven, Known as 'Socialist Realism.'

By TOM WHITNEY

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)—The pitfalls that beset Soviet authors are emphasized in reports of the Soviet Writers' Congress reaching here today.

Moscow newspapers carry a listing of mortal sins for authors, as presented by the chief Communist representative among Russian writers, A. A. Surkov. They include the following:

Art for art's sake, naturalism, objectivism, cosmopolitanism, nihilism, leftism, sociologism, primitivism, bourgeois nationalism, conflictlessness, idealessness, decadence, philistinism, formalism.

The Soviet writer who manages to avoid the snares of all these "isms" has the possibility of getting into Soviet writers' heaven—still another "ism."

This is known as "socialist realism."

It is called realism because it is expected to bear some relation to actuality and be portrayed in a manner comprehensible to all—including those whose I.Q. is pretty low.

It is called Socialist because the particular type of reality which the Soviet writer is expected to depict is that which the Communist party approves.

Stalin's Saving Grace.

Before Joseph Stalin died there was one saving grace to the situation: If Stalin liked a particular work then it was "Socialist realist" in character. If he did not, it was up to his hired hair-splitters to find a name to describe his dislike. Whatever it was called in the end the work itself was through.

Since there is no Stalin any more the present Soviet government called a writers' congress to define things.

An analysis makes these points clear:

When party critics look at a Soviet literary work they ask if it contains any Communist ideology.

If it has none, the author has committed one type of sin. The critics might, depending on what kind of a work it was, label it as reeking of art for art's sake, or perhaps decadence, or even philistinism or idealessness. Any of these terms could be just another way of saying that the work only amuses and does not preach Communism, that it isn't plugging the party line.

But the work could also be junked for having an overdose of Communist ideology. In such a situation it would be suffering from leftism, sociologism, or primitivism.

Pitfall of Nihilism.

If the writer does not put in his work quite enough Russian and Soviet chauvinism to suit the party he may be accused of cosmopolitanism or, even worse, of nihilism. These are serious since they are said to play into the hands of the "American warmongers."

The writer can go overboard in another direction as well—into bourgeois nationalism. If a work should seem to smack of contempt or dislike for other nationalities, to suggest that they can't be good Communists, too, this might be bourgeois nationalism.

There is the question of how much to gild the particular lily—Soviet life. If the author makes it look so good that even the dumbest Soviet reader can figure out he is being fooled, then that comes under the head of "conflictlessness." But if the writer depicts things as he sees them he almost certainly will fall into naturalism, objectivism or even formalism.

SPACE MEN CHUMS FAIL, DOCTOR STUCK ON THIS PLANET

CHICAGO, Dec. 25 (UP)—Dr. Charles Laughead would not have been surprised if his friends the "connoiters" had yanked him into outer space last ight, but he kept his feet on the ground.

As 100 persons watched, Laughead and some fellow believers sang Christmas carols and waited to be "lifted up" from the earth.

Laughead commented afterwards "I think maybe it was our spirits that were lifted."

If this was so, Mrs. Dorothy Martin's latest prediction came off better than did her forecast of a tidal wave last Tuesday.

Mrs. Martin, who relays "messages" from outer space to Laughead, announced yesterday that she, Laughead, and any one who wanted to go along would be "lifted up" from her front lawn in suburban Oak Park at exactly 6 p.m.

Later, Mrs. Martin said she was speaking in the spiritual sense, but Laughead apparently felt he might spend Christmas in outer space.

The ousted Michigan State College doctor said the space men—he calls them "connoiters"—"sent a message that we should be packed and waiting at 6 p.m. Christmas eve."

800 PUSAN HOUSES RAZED BY FIRE, 4000 HOMELESS

PUSAN, Korea, Sunday, Dec. 26 (AP) —Fire destroyed more than 800 homes in downtown Pusan early today. There was no report of casualties but police estimated that at least 4000 persons were made homeless.

A brisk north wind fanned the flames through the flimsy buildings. American and Korean firefighters succeeded in checking the fire before it reached the business district.

WEST BOLSTERED BY 70 DIVISIONS IN BALKAN PACT

Southeastern Flank Protected by Yugoslavian, Greek and Turkish Troops.

By FRED M. HECHINGER
The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Radio.

ATHENS, Dec. 25—While the spotlight was on 12 future West German divisions this year, the addition of many times that number of troops to the defense against Russian aggression went almost overlooked.

Without fanfare or goldfish-bowl diplomacy, three countries—Greece, Yugoslavia and Turkey—used the dog-day weeks of July and early August to forge the Balkan pact.

When the military alliance was signed last August in the Yugoslav lake resort of Bled, it set up a new and powerful road block against Soviet expansion. It gave the West an added bulwark of 70 divisions. Together the Balkan pact forces outnumber the armies of all the other European defense troops together.

North Gap Closed.

A defense is never more secure than its flanks. When Denmark and Norway joined the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, they helped close the threatening northern gap.

But until last summer a menacing hole remained in the vast southeastern area that stretches from Austria to the Black sea. This was what Churchill had called the "soft underbelly" of Europe in World War II.

Now with the strong and violently anti-Soviet armies of the three major Balkan nations linked in a firm alliance, the underbelly is no longer "soft."

What has this under-publicized alliance added to the free-world defense against aggression? Here is a quick outline of the Balkan's impressive strength:

Yugoslavia is estimated to have about 350,000 men under arms, with a trained and equipped reserve that would permit mobilization of almost 1,500,000 men in a few weeks.

About half of that army is equipped with modern American and NATO arms. The fact that the other half is still horse-drawn is not necessarily a weakness; a considerable part of the terrain makes non-mechanized forces a strong asset.

Jet pilots for Yugoslavia's growing fighter force are American-trained, and Yugoslav factories are beginning to turn out jet engines to augment American planes and spare parts.

Young Leaders.

The Yugoslav army is led by young, modern-thinking men. A Greek military expert in Athens spoke admiringly of Yugoslavia's "young army, where even the generals are in their thirties."

Greece maintains an army of 125,000, through it may have to cut its forces back to about 100,000 men for economy reasons. It has a superb fighter-plane force. Indicative of the country's air-mindedness, Defense Minister Panayotis Canellopoulos proudly told me of his "weakness" for piloting his own plane.

Recently a shipment of the first American F-86 jets arrived, to begin replacement of the F-84, and Greek pilots had the new planes in the air in excellent formation three days later.

A system of both national and NATO airfields dots Greece from Macedonia to Crete, and more are under construction. The small but traditionally proud Greek navy would be a valuable auxiliary to the powerful NATO naval forces.

Turkey has an army of 450,000, augmented by a small fighter and light-bomber air force and a navy strong enough to bottle off the Bosporus and the Dardanelles until aid arrives.

If the Turks still must catch up on some of the more delicate technical skills, that weakness is more than offset by an unbelieveable fighting spirit. When the first contingents of the Turkish army were prepared for Korea, the saying in Istanbul was that the barbed wire around the embarkation area was designed, not to keep deserters from getting out, but to keep volunteers from sneaking in.

RUNAWAY AUTO SETS HOME AFIRE, CAUSES ONE DEATH

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 25 (AP)—An automobile raced out of control in a busy section of Birmingham today, leaving one man dead from a heart attack, four other vehicles damaged, a gas main broken and the side of a house smashed and afire.

Curtis Gardner was starting to carve the turkey for his family's Christmas dinner when the runaway automobile struck the house, burst into flames and set the building afire. No one in the home was hurt.

Adam A. Quick, 63 years old, of Tarrant City, Ala., died of a heart attack after the car he was riding in was struck.

Willie Mae Debardeleben, who was taken to a hospital for treatment, told officers the accelerator of her automobile jammed and she was unable to release it.

ALL ST. LOUIS FIRE TRUCKS EQUIPPED WITH GAS MASKS

All the city's fire trucks now are equipped with all-purpose gas masks, Director of Public Safety Joseph P. Sestric said yesterday following delivery of 52 additional masks to the Fire Department.

The masks were ordered by Sestric several weeks ago in order to equip fully the department to fight fires marked by dense smoke or injurious fumes.

CRUSHED ICE PROVIDES SNOW FOR CHRISTMAS IN TAMPA

TAMPA, Fla., Dec. 25 (AP)—A Tampa family, spending its first Christmas away from Gloucester, Mass., got a lawn full of snow as a Christmas present.

Actually it was about six tons of finely crushed ice, but it looks like snow to most Floridians and it is just about as satisfying to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Canis and their three daughters, Jackie, 12 years old, Yvonne, 9, and Shelly, 4.

Canis, a shrimp-boat captain, made a deal with a Tampa ice company to cover his lawn with the stuff. Canis said it was the best $20 he ever spent.

NEW AVIATION SAFETY RECORD SET IN 1954

Only 16 Lives Lost in Crashes of Scheduled Airlines.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP)—Private and commercial aviation broke all records for traffic and safety this year, Civil Aeronautics Administrator F. B. Lee reported today.

Scheduled airlines carried 34,673,000 paying passengers, with 16 lives lost in accidents. Total scheduled airline mileage flown was 665,000,000.

Lee said the safety record was better than that of the railroads in 1953, on the basis of how many persons were killed in each 100,000,000 passenger-miles of travel.

Non-scheduled airlines had operated for 16 months without a fatality until this week's crash of a chartered transport plane near Pittsburgh.

The 16 deaths on scheduled airlines occurred in three accidents. Last year there were 88 in six accidents.

The number of paying passengers this year was 10 per cent higher than 1953. The total scheduled airline mileage was up 6 per cent.

Flying in business planes—those owned by private businesses—increased to the point where they surpassed the scheduled airlines this year in the number of hours flown.

Business planes flew about 3,900,000 hours in the year, 700,000 more than the domestic and international scheduled airlines of the United States.

Aircraft production jumped 20 per cent in dollar value, although there was a drop in the number of planes produced.

Airplane factories turned out 410 planes of the more-than-five-passenger variety, almost 100 more than last year. The total number of airplanes produced declined 20 per cent, however, from 4134 in 1953 to 3300 this year.

The aircraft industry's income increased, thanks to the larger planes. Dollar value of total production was $408,000,000.

TRUMAN SAYS HE RECEIVED '3 OR 4 BUSHELS' OF CARDS

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 25 (AP)—Harry Truman says his mail in recent weeks contained about "three or four bushels of greetings."

The former President told reporters yesterday the greetings were from all parts of the country as well as from the heads of foreign states.

Attached to many were various sums of money ranging up to $300 for the Truman Memorial Library.

"I am happy and grateful to the many, especially those who attached small contributions for the library," Truman said.

The former President spent a quiet day today at his home in Independence with Christmas dinner with his family, including daughter Margaret who is home for the holidays.

M'FADDEN SEEKS LOAN TO AVOID JAIL

Physical Culturist Must Raise $10,000 to Pay Wives No. 2 and 3.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 25 (AP)—Bernarr MacFadden, 86-year-old physical culture enthusiast who made and lost millions, asked for a loan today—from just anybody—to keep him out of jail.

"New York courts refuse to believe that back taxes and allmony to two wives have depleted my finances," the white-haired man said in a statement distributed to reporters. "I must raise $10,000 in 10 days or go to jail."

The jail reference was related to court actions brought by Jonnie Lee MacFadden, 48, an interior decorator, his third wife, who recently won a separation from him, and his second wife, Mary MacFadden.

To help him raise the $10,000 to satisfy the court actions, MacFadden said he had asked former heavyweight champion Jack Dempsey to act on his behalf.

"I have asked Jack Dempsey . . . to act as custodian of funds from those who might want to help to keep me out of jail till I can repay them somehow," MacFadden's statement said, adding: "Please help me. This is my worst Christmas in 86 years."

MacFadden, who often stands on his head as an aid to health, ran into legal troubles last Tuesday when he was adjudged in contempt of New York supreme court.

Justice S. Samuel di Falco took the actions on the ground MacFadden had failed to pay $1500 in alimony arrears and $5000 in counsel fees to Jonnie Lee MacFadden.

The justice said MacFadden could purge himself of the contempt by paying $3500 of the $6500 within 10 days and $3000 within 20 days.

Di Falco also found MacFadden in contempt in an action brought by the City Bank Farmers Trust Co. and involving his second wife, the former Mary Williamson, a one-time London health contest winner.

MacFadden was ordered to pay $3315 to make up deficits in a trust he created for wife No. 2.

To purge himself of this latter contempt, MacFadden must pay the money within 20 days.

Movie Fire Out of Control

—United Press Telephoto.

Flames shoot up behind terrified actress JULIE ADAMS on a movie set at the Universal-International Studio in Hollywood when a "make-believe" fire goes out of control Thursday. Everyone on the sound stage escaped injury, but damage was estimated at $175,000. The fite started when Ann Baxter threw a book at Rock Hudson, knocking over a kerosene lamp. That was according to the script. The fire spreading out of control wasn't in the script.

RITA HAYWORTH CHILD CUSTODY CASE IS CLOSED

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y., Dec. 25 (UP)—A Westchester county judge has closed the case of the alleged neglect of movie star Rita Hayworth's two daughters, declaring that he was satisfied that the children now were getting proper care.

Children's Court Judge George W. Smyth chose Christmas eve to announce that the court was formally relinquishing control of the custody of Rebecca Welles, 9 years old, and Princess Yasmin Khan, 4.

The court has had technical control of the two girls since last April 26, although actually they had been in the custody of their mother.

The Westchester Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children charged last April 23 that Rebecca and Yasmin were being neglected. At the time the children were being cared for by Mrs. Dorothy Chambers, a White Plains antique shop operator.

Senate's Own Security Program Killed by Lack of FBI Support

Not One Senatorial Employe Has Been Screened Since Plan Was Approved 21 Months Ago.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP)—The Senate's own private security program was dead as a dodo today.

In fact, it appears that not a single employe of a Senator, Senate committee or Senate official has been screened since it was approved 21 months ago.

Sponsored by the late Senator Pat McCarran (Dem.), Nevada, the plan was intended to subject the Senate's own employes to the same sort of security clearance required by many executive agencies. It breezed through the Senate without a record vote on March 6, 1953.

Under the plan, the Federal Bureau of Investigation would have been required to inform Senators, committees and Senate administrative officials of derogatory information in its files on present—and prospective—Senate employes. The FBI also was to supply data tending to refute such derogatory information.

Dismissal Not Required.

Employers were not required to dismiss employes or applicants on the basis of such reports. They were simply to "make or cause to be made such further investigation as shall be considered necessary."

The plan did not alter the procedure under which many committees, including the armed services and appropriations groups, get full FBI checks on all employes.

It ran into trouble almost at once when Senate offices began supplying lists of their employes. The lists were acknowledged by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover with a note saying that the Justice Department was still studying the program.

In a conference with Chairman William E. Jenner (Rep.), Indiana, of the Senate Rules Committee, Deputy Attorney General William P. Rogers complained that the FBI had been given no funds to finance the plan. He also objected that the procedure might compromise some of the information in the FBI's files and also the informants who supplied it.

Senate officials said that the Justice Department also objected to sending such reports on employes in Senate offices.

Never Evaluated.

The FBI never evaluates such information, but it also was not anxious to tell Senators—for example—that a trusted employe was reported to drink excessively.

The meetings between Rogers, Jenner and other Senate leaders failed to resolve the controversy. And Congress adjourned in 1953 without any procedure having been developed. But lists continued to go to the department from many committees. They also continued to be acknowledged by Hoover along with the comment that Rogers had the plan under study.

After a while some committees and other Senate offices stopped submitting names. Jenner had said he hoped to confer with department officials early this year, but no such conferences appear to have been held.

WOMAN MARRIED FOR 26 YEARS HAS 26TH CHILD

FORT KENT, Me., Dec. 25 (AP)—A Canadian woman married 26 years gave birth to her twenty-sixth child Christmas eve.

"Every new baby is easier; after having so many, it is easier to handle them," said Mrs. Marie Cyr, 42-year-old wife of a Ledges (N.B.) farmer.

"It's a girl and we've named her Noella Jean. Noella is French for Christmas and Jean is the first name of our doctor's daughter," said the father, 47.

"It's a real Christmas present for the children and me," said papa Cyr.

Of their 26 children, 19—ten girls and nine boys—are living. Two are married and Noella Jean will join the other 16 in their 11-room rural home.

All of Mrs. Cyr's children were born singly.

SOCIAL SECURITY TAX CEILING GOES UP JAN. 1

Maximum annual earnings on which the social security tax applies will be increased from $3600 to $4200 on Jan. 1, employers and employes were reminded yesterday by T. L. Gaukel, social security administration manager here.

Employers and employes will pay $12 more next year, where the worker earns $4200 or more. There will be no change for those earning $3600 or less. Benefits will be higher for those earning the higher pay, beginning in 1956.

Gaukel also called attention to a recent change in the law providing monthly payments to dependents of persons who worked a year and a half in covered employment and who died after 1939 and before Sept. 1, 1950. Such persons now are considered to have been fully insured.

Underdeveloped Areas of World Drifting Toward Communism With No Free Alternative in Sight

U.S. Unready With Assistance Program Because the Administration Is Split on What to Do.

PRESIDENT IS FOR, HUMPHREY AGAINST

G.O.P. Hope of Balancing the Budget and Provision for National Defense Seem to Have Priority.

By DONALD GRANT
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.

TWO basic, unresolved conflicts within the Eisenhower administration are blocking the formation of a significant economic program to stop the erosion of Communism in the underdeveloped areas of the world.

The Administration so far has found itself unable to abandon the hope for a "balanced budget" and at the same time make the necessary expenditures for military defenses and an assistance program for the underdeveloped areas.

Furthermore, the Administration has found itself too deeply, and too emotionally, committed to the idea that "free private enterprise" is the cure for most of the world's ills to embark on a program under which, of necessity, governments would have to take some of the initiative.

As a result, a curious situation obtains in Washington today:

On the one hand, the most solemn decisions have been taken, in the Eisenhower Cabinet and in the National Security Council, that economic action is necessary to meet the growing force of Communism in the underdeveloped areas—in South and Southeast Asia, in Africa and the Middle East and in Latin America. On the other, these decisions remain scraps of paper, without serious implementation.

THE PRESENT CYCLE of indecision dates back to last spring, when it became obvious, especially to Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and to some of President Eisenhower's White House advisers, that Communism was winning the struggle for the loyalty of the billion human beings in the underdeveloped areas outside the Iron Curtain. The attraction of Communism, and particularly of the Chinese example of economic development, threatened, and still threatens, to tip the world balance of power fatally against the United States and its allies.

At the request of the White House, the Center for International Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology worked at forced draft to prepare a plan for a new United States foreign economic policy to stop the drift to Communism in the underdeveloped areas. Thinking behind this plan, which was described in some detail by the present writer in a series of articles last month, included the obvious notion that economic development involves "capital formation"—money, and goods used for production rather than for consumption.

Red China's Mao Tse-tung has a plan for "capital formation" by forcing the peasants to produce more than the people eat—in effect, using harsh Communist discipline to squeeze factories and machines out of the people themselves. In the absence of such harsh discipline, the M.I.T. studies concluded that outside capital, injected into the underdeveloped areas from the industrialized nations, was the only workable alternative.

While the M.I.T. plan was under study in Washington, the United States and the 20 Latin American republics met at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, for an economic conference last month. Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey was the head of the United States delegation.

AT THE RIO CONFERENCE the United States foreign economic policy was seen in action. Under Humphrey's leadership it proved to be an almost wholly negative policy: Humphrey refused even to consider serious proposals for the extensive economic development of Latin America. Observers from other underdeveloped areas, including Asia, were present.

Humphrey did not dwell on the internal United States fiscal policies at the Rio conference, but his overpowering desire for a "balanced budget" was the unspoken assumption underlying nearly everything he said. He was quite specific, moreover, in seeking to destroy any Latin America illusions that "government initiative" was a useful thing in the development of the underdeveloped areas. In this, of course, Humphrey was fighting again the Republican campaigns of the 1930s against the Roosevelt New Deal, now on an international stage.

The Administration position was confused, however, even at this point, by a Washington press conference in which Harold E. Stassen, director of the Foreign Operations Administration, led some newspaper reporters to believe he was advocating a "Marshall plan for Asia," if he did not, in fact, do so.

Humphrey, at Rio, got Stassen on the telephone. Whatever passed between the two—and there is no reason to suppose it was an entirely friendly conversation—it did not stop a whole series of Washington "leaks' to newspapers around a "Marshall plan for Asia" theme.

The result has been more confusion. Neither the M.I.T. plan nor other serious studies of the problem see any real parallel between the Marshall Plan operations and a useful program for the underdeveloped areas.

Stassen is widely suspected, both by Humphrey's people and by those who are working for an adequate program for the underdeveloped areas, of seeking chiefly to perpetuate his Foreign Operations Administration, scheduled to be dismantled next June 30.

THE PROBLEM remains. The one billion human beings in the underdeveloped areas are determined to improve their condition—one way or another. Guatemala, Iran and Indochina were plain enough warnings. The Japanese economy is in serious trouble. If Southern Indochina slips behind the Iron Curtain, most serious repercussions are expected in Indonesia, Thailand and India.

There is no serious disagreement about the necessity of meeting this threat with economic action. The disagreement arises only about doing it.

As early as April, 1953, President Eisenhower, in his address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, declared:

"This government is ready to ask its people to join with all nations in devoting a substantial percentage of the savings achieved by disarmament to a fund for world aid and reconstruction. The purposes of this great work would be: to help other peoples to develop the underdeveloped areas of the world. . . ."

Disarmament, of course, we have not had, but our defense budget has been reduced—without any savings being devoted to a developmental program. On the contrary, a steady reduction in the scope of "foreign aid" has taken place.

The position of Secretary Dulles is in some ways the most interesting, though perhaps also the most confusing. In his Chicago address Nov. 29, in several press conferences and in private conversations he has spelled out a seemingly firm conviction that the main battleground between Russian-Chinese Communism and the United States in the next decade is very likely to be in the field of economic development of the underdeveloped areas; that the "uncommitted nations" of Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America are in the process of choosing between the Mao Tse-tung Communist plan for development and a Free World plan—if and when a Free World plan is presented.

At the same time, Dulles as yet gives no sign of being willing to fight vigorously for this view inside the Administration.

Friends of both Dulles and Dean Acheson relate an illuminating incident which is said to have taken place when the present Secretary took over from his predecessor. Dulles, so the story goes, told Acheson that it was a mistake, in his opinion, for a Secretary of State to concern himself intimately with foreign economic policy. Acheson is said to have replied that the theory was an interesting one which he also had held—and discarded—on discovering that "a Secretary of State who loses control of foreign economic policy also loses control of foreign policy."

Those who know this story are wondering how far Dulles really has come to the Acheson "discovery."

The one man in the Administration whose position is in no serious doubt is Humphrey, probably the strongest member of the Eisenhower cabinet, in terms of power. If Dulles and President Eisenhower would like to see a program for the underdeveloped areas—while hesitating to face the budgetary and other implications of such a program—Humphrey suffers from no such schizophrenia.

His convictions, apparently, are deep and emotional: every effort must be made to balance the budget; "free private enterprise," not "government initiative," is the only orthodoxy to be recognized.

At Rio, Humphrey heard the basic arguments against his position: Only outside capital can develop the underdeveloped areas, without Communism. The United States generates two-thirds of the world's capital, but sufficiently massive quantities of this capital can be made to flow to the underdeveloped areas only by "government initiative," which of necessity will involve an "unbalanced budget" in the United States. . . . Humphrey's convictions remained unshaken in the slightest degree, as he told this writer at the time, and later repeated at a Washington press conference.

THE POSSIBILITY that the new Council on Foreign Economic Policy, headed by former Budget Director Joseph M. Dodge, can—or will attempt to—override Humphrey's convictions, would appear almost non-existent; nor, so long as Humphrey's power in the Administration remains undiminished, would the possibility seem very great that a really massive program for development of the underdeveloped areas be adopted.

The Council on Foreign Economic Policy merely reproduces the basic conflicts within the Administration. Dulles, Stassen and Humphrey are members, as is Nelson Rockefeller, new Presidential assistant and a friend of the idea of development of the underdeveloped areas. But Dodge is chairman, and Dodge is a "Humphrey man," if anything more orthodox in his views than the Secretary of the Treasury.

The new Council represents an interesting example of the Eisenhower method of dialectic compromise, a method which has sound historical precedents going back to such classic conservatives as Edmund Burke and Benjamin Disraeli.

In this instance, seasoned Washington observers are inclined to think the method may well result in a half-hearted presentation to Congress of a program giving a little more "aid" to the underdeveloped areas, with emphasis on Asia, where the danger of Communism appears greatest at the moment.

The staff of the M.I.T. Center for International Studies, which has given the question the closest examination, fears that such a result will inspire neither the people of the United States, who must pay the bill, nor the people of the underdeveloped areas, whom we seek to persuade to join our cause.

A radical result, so it is argued, can be achieved only by a bold, imaginative effort; and the result here sought certainly is a radical one in the true sense of the word—in effect, a reversal of history for one billion human beings, to be lifted rapidly from centuries of stagnation and put on the road to twentieth century progress.

THE DIMENSIONS of an adequate effort have been worked out at M.I.T., and in confidential studies in Washington, with about the same result. It is not claimed that a precise formulation of "the problem of magnitude" is in this instance possible, but some rough estimates have withstood a good deal of criticism without being challenged seriously.

Two questions are involved here:

How much capital can the underdeveloped areas use to good advantage? and

How much can the industrialized nations, particularly the United States, afford to lend or give?

The M.I.T. approach to the first question is to set investment targets in underdeveloped areas higher than it is reasonable to suppose such countries might meet—as an incentive. In other words, such countries should be encouraged to absorb as much capital as possible so long as investments really contribute to development.

Investment goals, therefore, might be set as high as $4,000,000,000 a year for all the underdeveloped areas, but it is not believed that such areas can absorb, in practice, more than, say, $3,000,000,000 a year. At best, development takes time and much careful planning.

Of this amount, for purposes of calculating the impact on the United States economy, it is estimated that this country might furnish $2,000,000,000 a year and the other industrialized countries $1,000,000,000.

Is the United States barrel deep enough to furnish $2,000,000,000 a year for the next ten years or so for development of the world's underdeveloped areas?

The answer worked out by M.I.T. economists is that the United States economy as a whole would benefit if, without raising taxes, we were to take from the Treasury another $5,000,000,000 dollars a year for additional armed defense, plus the proposed $2,000,000,000 a year for development of the underdeveloped areas.

Details of this answer have been formu-

Chinese 'Little Point Fours'

By GEORGE H. HALL
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.

RAPID growth of miniature Chinese lending programs in Indonesia, and probably in other parts of Asia, sharply points up some of the difficulties the United States faces in formulating an effective Far East economic assistance program. A Government official just returned from three years in Indonesia reported the Chinese programs have assumed the proportions of "Little Point Fours."

It is assumed some of them are being undertaken with Communist support, although there is no proof of this. The Communist objective appears to be, the informant said, the formation of a state within a state and eventual capture of the Indonesian Government by parliamentary means.

A similar pattern has been found in Indochina, where the Communists obviously hope to take over all of Viet Nam at elections to be held in 1956 under the Geneva agreement if they do not consolidate the country by other means before that. The Viet Namese Communists under Ho Chi Minh set up an effective government in the north long before they drove out the French earlier this year.

In Indonesia, Chinese moneylenders, who are the principal usurers and bankers of Asia, have in recent months been making small development loans at radically low interest rates, the Post-Dispatch informant said. They seem to have plenty of money for this purpose. Some of the lenders are thought to be acting for the Chinese Communists. Others may simply be anticipating increasing Red Chinese influence in the expectation of a cut in future business.

Indonesia has a serious shortage of protein foods, such as fish, and the Government, with some United States advice, has been trying to improve the availability of sea foods. One of the activities of the Chinese lenders has been to finance the purchase of trucks by individuals in the numerous fishing villages that dot the Java coast.

The Chinese, or course, holds the mortgage on the truck and by this economic lever holds a sort of mortgage on the political allegiance of the fisherman, and by extension, of his employes. The Chinese who supplied the truck then becomes, in a very small way, an economic-political boss.

It would be the purpose of the Chinese financier to influence local elections, particularly for offices that would be concerned with the awarding of development contracts. The contracts would be handed to the right people and the influence of the small politico-economic nucleus would be extended.

The process is of particular significance in Indonesia because this key country of 80,000,000 people (including more than 2,000,000 Chinese) and enormous natural resources is a member of the Asian "neutralist" bloc and has never had a popular election. The first national election originally was scheduled for early next year, but the Government now is talking in terms of mid-year or later.

The American official emphasized that the small Chinese development loans are strictly private affairs and that some Indonesians have wondered why they cannot go to big United States corporations operating in Indonesia and obtain similar loans quickly and without red tape.

It is obvious that if the Chinese Communists can establish, direct, extend and control such a lending program they would have an extremely powerful weapon for use in elections. The Communists already have a strong voice in the labor unions and they are rapidly infiltrating the Indonesian farmers' organization.

It seems equally obvious that although Indonesia is a potentially valuable ally of the West, extending large-scale governmental aid to the Indonesian Government would have its hazards. The balances are so delicate that it would be difficult to prevent the Communists from reaping benefits, either at the top or at the village level after the benefits had trickled down.

One of the things the United States requires to counter the Indonesian situation, in the opinion of the informant, is a group of representatives who understand as much as all Communists appear to know about the ins and outs of gutter politics.

"What we need," he said, "is a bunch of city hall politicians who know what to do with Christmas baskets."

SENATOR KNOWLAND

Eisenhower's No. 1 Problem In New Democratic Congress Will Be G.O.P. Leader Knowland

Californian, Never Much of Follower Anyway, Disagrees With Much of President's Program and Aspires to Head Conservative Taft Wing of Party — His Feud With Nixon Will Complicate Relations.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT
Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.

SENATOR WILLIAM FIFE KNOWLAND, official leader of the Senate Republicans, will be President Eisenhower's No. 1 problem in dealing with the Democratic Eighty-fourth Congress.

The 46-year-old, ruggedly individualistic Californian almost certainly will be re-elected on Jan. 5 by the conference of 47 Republican Senators as their floor leader. This will make him an important ex-officio member of the party's 12-man policy committee and he will continue to attend the weekly White House conferenees of congressional leaders with the President.

One reason for his prospective re-election is clear. Even if Mr. Eisenhower had the Rooseveltian urge to use White House blandishments and pressures in personal congressional politics, he has no candidate who could defeat Knowland. Since Knowland sided with the right-wingers who voted against censure of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy he has personified the almost even division of Republican Senators.

In the Republican Eighty-third Congress, Knowland, as the majority leader without a real majority behind him, occasionally voted against the Eisenhower program, notably on the Bricker amendment to restrict the President's treaty-making powers, on McCarthy and on Asiatic foreign policy.

WITH THAT CONGRESS in recess or adjournment, he has continued his open opposition to the President by public telegrams to the White House, formal statements and interviews. There is no evidence that he has had a change of heart and will give 100 per cent co-operation to Mr. Eisenhower in the future. Because he is temperamentally not a follower and does not recognize Mr. Eisenhower as his leader, he has had difficulty in persuading others to follow himself or the President.

In reply to arguments that he should retire as leader of the Senate Republicans because of his disagreement with integral parts of the Eisenhower program, Knowland cites a tabulation by Congressional Quarterly, a fact-finding news service, that in the first session of the Eighty-third Congress he voted with the White House on 87 per cent of the roll calls and 91 per cent in the second session.

Any student of statistics would note, however, that such percentages are not weighted by importance and that the list used contained such non-controversial or non-partisan recommendations as ratification of a copyright convention, which passed the Senate 65 to 3, and an opium treaty that was approved 70 to 0. How many such votes are required to counterbalance his anti-Administration votes on the Bricker amendment or the McCarthy censure is beyond the statistician's slide-rule.

VARIOUS REASONS, some real, some speculative, have been advanced to account for Knowland's intra-party battling. Knowland's own explanation is that he regards himself not as an Administration spokesman in the Senate, as Democratic leaders under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman regarded themselves, but as a Senate ambassador to the White House and a White House ambassador to the Senate.

In this dual role, Knowland feels his obligation is greater as a Senator than as a member of the presidential "team" which is responsible to the country and the world for the conduct of this nation's affairs. He also feels he has individual and personal rights as a Senator which permit him to vote and act for what he considers the best interests of the people of California.

Knowland's concept of his duty and privileges has aroused debate among practical politicians and students of government. One school of thought argues that the President, having been elected by the people and having access to domestic and foreign information not available to other Government officials, is entitled to have spokesmen and advocates in the Senate and House who wholeheartedly support his program.

This is the view taken by Republican Speaker Joseph W. Martin Jr. of Massachusetts, House Majority Leader, Charles A. Halleck of Indiana and Republican Whip Leslie Arends of Illinois. These three House leaders have subordinated their personal political and economic philosophies—which in the past were far to the right of President Eisenhower's—to present a united front to the House Democrats and the world.

This was also the view of Democratic Speaker Sam Rayburn and Senate Democratic leaders Joseph Robinson of Arkansas, Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, Scott Lucas of Illinois and Ernest W. McFarland of Arizona under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman.

This whole-hearted support by congressional leaders is the theoretical basis of the two-party system which recognizes the President as leader of the party as well as Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief. It doesn't always work, as President Truman found out when confronted with a coalition of conservative Southern Democrats and conservative Republicans.

THE KNOWLAND THEORY, which has the indorsement of some constitutional authorities, is that, since Congress is co-equal with the executive branch, congressional leaders of the party in power have an obligation to speak out when they are in disagreement with the White House.

Knowland asserts that he will not be gagged. The power and the responsibility of Senate leaders, under this principle, are greater than those of House leaders because of the constitutional provision that the President shall have power "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur."

Acting on his interpretation of this provision, Knowland has publicly broken with the White House by demanding a blockade of Red China, preferably by the United Nations, but by the United States alone if the U.N. does not act; use of the United States Navy and Air Force to protect the islands around Formosa and United States withdrawal from the U.N. if Red China is admitted.

The White House was especially irritated this fall when Knowland made public a telegram calling for a diplomatic break with Soviet Russia, following the shooting down of a Navy patrol plane by Russian jets, before the telegram had time to reach the President at his summer White House in Denver.

Mr. Eisenhower has defended the right of a Senator to say whatever he pleases, but practical politicians and experienced diplomats point out that when the official party leader of the Senate speaks out in contradiction of the President and the foreign policy of the United States our allies with parliamentary governments and our enemies with dictatorships are confused about who is speaking for the American people. The Constitution does not define the rights and duties of a congressional leader.

IN ADDITION to the constitutional differences between the President and his Senate leader, there are personnel political complexities and ambitions that are likely to make co-operation between the White House and the Senate more difficult in the next Congress.

Among the official Republican leaders, Knowland is almost alone in not publicly calling for the renomination and re-election of Mr. Eisenhower. At the 1952 Republican national convention, Knowland was for the nomination of California Gov. Earl Warren, now the Chief Justice, who had appointed him to the Senate in 1945 to fill the seat left vacant by the death of Republican Hiram Johnson. There were persistent rumors at Chicago that Knowland would have been the choice of the late Senator Robert A. Taft for the vice presidential nomination if Taft had won over Gen. Eisenhower.

Asked about President Eisenhower and 1956, Knowland has repeatedly replied:

"The record of the Administration in domestic and foreign policy as viewed by the party and the nation in 1956 will determine the presidential choice."

This non-committal answer has been taken as added evidence that Knowland has presidential or vice presidential ambitions which run head-on against those of Vice President Richard M. Nixon, who belongs to a rival Republican faction in California.

Nixon is 41 years old to Knowland's 46 and both have had meteoric political careers. Both would be high up in the running for the presidential nomination if President Eisenhower were adamant about retiring to his Gettysburg farm after one term. Knowland would represent the Taft wing of the Republican delegates and Nixon the "moderate progressives" of the Eisenhower segment. It is perhaps significant that Knowland recently described himself a "moderate conservative."

NOT THE LEAST of the President's probable difficulties with the new Congress is the coolness existing between the two Californians because of their political ambitions and differences in temperaments. Knowland is intense, deadly earnest, almost grim, and seemingly indefatigable, with his 200-pound-plus energetic physique. Nixon is the smiling, suave politician, wise to the ways of publicity and personal charm, with almost debonair, detached cynicism, when not engaged on a political or governmental assignment.

Knowland takes himself seriously; Nixon takes his job seriously. Knowland was personally selected by Senator Taft to succeed him as Republican floor leader; Nixon was embraced by Candidate Eisenhower as "my boy" following Nixon's televised explanation of the disclosure that he, as a Senator, had taken $16,000 from a group of wealthy Californians to help pay his expenses in Washington.

On controversial presidential recommendations likely to split the Republicans in the new Senate, Knowland can be expected at times to head the bloc of conservative nationalists of the Bricker-Bridges-Malone group and Nixon the Eisenhower group. This will be to the decided advantage of Democratic leader Lyndon Johnson of Texas, who has demonstrated that he can come up with a disciplined, unanimous front of Democrats if that is required by party strategy.

It is difficult to envision such close teamwork between Republican Nixon and Knowland. That is why the Republican Senate leader will be the President's No. 1 problem.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Return of the Panther?

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

May I add a chapter to your great what-is-it, or varmint serial?

Dee Spencer, mail carrier at Browns, Edwards county in Southeastern Illinois, at 11:45 one morning saw an animal at the roadside watching a herd of hogs.

He stopped his car about 40 feet from the varmint and watched it for several minutes. It was yellow-brown in color with an over-all length of about five feet. It had a broad, flat, catlike face; ears not large but held erect and prominent, medium-length legs. The tail was "long as the body," slender and with the last four inches tipped with black.

Roscoe Evans, also of Browns, picked up the animal in his car lights one night. It bounded from a high bank a distance of 10 or 12 feet into the road.

It was brownish-yellow in color, six feet over-all, with a slender tail two and one-half feet long carried with the tip up.

As Mr. Evans reached for a rifle in the back seat the critter took another 10-foot leap to the top of the bank on the other side of the road. Mr. Evans has seen mountain lions in zoos and says this was a mountain lion.

Mrs. Grant Mode, near Grayville, saw the animal in car lights. It was brownish-yellow, larger than a large dog, with a long, slender tail. It bounded off the road over a wire fence.

This writer is collecting material for Dr. Bruce S. Wright, University of New Brunswick, who is writing a book on the return of the panther to Eastern North America. Eye witness accounts from this region will be appreciated. A. M. WALTON.

The Senator Amazes Him

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Anyone capable of any objective thought would have to agree with the essential soundness of the major assertions made in Senator Byrd's recent letter to the editor. The Virginia Democrat was protesting the projected budget deficit.

What amazes me a lot, and puzzles me even more, is that anyone as politically wise as I believe him to be would make such statements—particularly in public print!

"If we continue to play Santa Claus to our people at home and half of the world abroad," the Senator protested, "we can expect nothing but collapse of our currency with all of its terrible consequences." Such talk, Senator! Is this practical politics? Is this the way to make friends and influence people—except a few old conservatives like me?

Another thing, Senator, let's not be too hard on poor Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey. Let's give the present Administration credit for at least having tried. Seems to me—if memory serves me rightly—they started out with a hard-money, balance-the-budget, reduce-the-debt policy, didn't they?

Seems, also that they switched when they realized that there are still so many of us who dread growing up and being told that there is really no Santa Claus.

Inventing Socialist Tales of Hoffman,
Who, late of Mister Ford's Foundation,
He likes to think subverts the nation.

To Countless Listeners

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In presenting the Rev. Dr. James W. Clarke, one of America's great preachers, Sunday after Sunday, KSD-TV has given to St. Louis and the area about it a service of far-reaching and enduring significance.

Few men have touched the life of the community in so many aspects, and whatever he has touched he has deepened, enriched and strengthened.

To countless listeners his forthright messages have brought new hope and comfort and courage, new visions of responsibility, and new faith in the goodness and sovereignty of God.

Non-Shooting Contract

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

The worst flaw that I see in the present peace efforts is that there should be a time factor—like a labor contract.

If all the countries of the world signed even a two-year non-shooting contract, I believe that their nerves would relax and they could then renew the contract. GIL BAIRD.

The Ladejinsky Case

There is only one way to tell the story of Wolf Ladejinsky and that is to begin at the beginning. Born in Russia 55 years ago, he was a youth of 18 at the time of the 1917 Russian Revolution. He was quick to make up his mind against Communism as a way of life and in 1922 he escaped from the Communist regime that had supplanted rule by the Czars. He took refuge in the United States and became a citizen in 1928.

Wolf Ladejinsky was little influenced by the fact that his new country recognized Soviet Russia in 1933. The very next year he wrote an article attacking the enslavement, as he saw it at that early time, of the Russian peasants by the Stalin dictatorship. For a short time he worked as an interpreter for Amtorg, the Soviet trading agency. His primary interest, farming and farm life, led him to the United States Department of Agriculture whose staff he joined in 1935.

By the close of World War II he knew as much if not more than anyone else in Washington about the land problems of Asia. From 1945 to 1948 he was a trusted member of Gen. MacArthur's staff, at work on land reform in Japan. In the words of Correspondent Keyes Beech, Gen. MacArthur praised land reform under Wolf Ladejinsky as a "bloodless revolution and model for agrarian Asia where the Communists exploit peasant unrest."

During the next two years, he studied the problem of land reform in India, China and Formosa. In India he surveyed two depressed areas to see how peasant ownership of land could be used to stop the march of Communism where food to keep up life is man's daily worry.

On Formosa he rolled up his sleeves and worked among the farmers to improve production for the forces of Chiang Kai-shek. Changes he brought about improved substantially the share of farmers. For this work he was granted the Agriculture Department's "superior service award" in 1950. In the same year he was promoted to the post of agricultural attache at the United States Embassy in Tokyo.

From time to time, the record of Wolf Ladejinsky was reviewed for security. As late as last February, more than a year after the Eisenhower Administration took office, he went through a State Department security check. As before he was approved and declared not to be a risk.

In the face of this long public career of anti-Communist works on the part of Wolf Ladejinsky, Agriculture Secretary Benson a week ago declared him a security risk and dropped him from his post at Tokyo. Notwithstanding protests in Washington, Japan and India, the week has gone by without clarification.

One suggested explanation is that Secretary Benson prefers someone in Tokyo "more representative" of farming in this country. Another is a reported desire for an attache who will push harder for markets for American farm produce. Neither is impressive, particularly since The Washington Post reports that American flour and cotton trade organizations have highly praised Mr. Ladejinsky's work in Japan. Neither of these possible complaints has anything to do with security.

Instead of clarification, the passage of a week brought further confusion. Republican Congressman Judd of Minnesota criticized the dismissal unreservedly. He said that Mr. Ladejinsky had "done more than any other individual to combat Communism in Asia." From within the State Department came word that Embassy officials sent personal messages to Secretary Dulles in strong support of the attache's competence and character. The Associated Press announced that the State Department, currently his paymaster, was standing by Mr. Ladejinsky and had no intention of dismissing him. White House Press Secretary Hagerty said there was nothing to the report that President Eisenhower is on the side of Secretary Benson.

At the end of the week came two developments that put Secretary Benson in a deep hole. First the Eisenhower Foreign Operations Administration, headed by Harold E. Stassen, let it be known that when it tried to hire Mr. Ladejinsky away from the Agriculture Department three months ago, Secretary Benson's department refused to release him because he was "too valuable." Next Senator Johnston of South Carolina, who will head the Civil Service Committee in the new Senate, instructed the committee staff to gather the facts about the Ladejinsky case and report as soon as possible.

To extricate himself from this mess, Secretary Benson belatedly issued a statement saying that Mr. Ladejinsky could have "another" job in the Agriculture Department provided he "meets" security standards. The Cabinet officer explained that the post in Tokyo "would now be a 'sensitive' position from a security standpoint."

This is not enough from Mr. Benson. He fired a superior career official in the federal service even though the man possesses security clearance from that tireless Red hunter, Scott McLeod. After a week of protests literally around the globe, Mr. Benson now tries to make amends by saying that he will give Mr. Ladejinsky "another" job. What utter nonsense!

Either Mr. Ladejinsky is qualified for the federal service or he is not. Either he is a security risk or he is not. Either he should be in the Department of Agriculture or he should not. If Secretary Benson has a case he should make it publicly without delay. If he has no case, he should confess a blunder and a grave injustice.

How can President Eisenhower continue to give the appearance of not being interested in the causes and effects of such personnel controversies in his Administration?

Surely Mr. Eisenhower cares deeply about the standing of the United States among the free nations. Surely he is worried about the fall in morale of our diplomatic servants overseas. Surely the President cares as much as do countless ordinary citizens. Surely he does!

In Humanity to the Aged

Better legislation and strict inspection are required to bring Missouri nursing homes up to standard. The injunction suit filed against three St. Louis county nursing homes in behalf of the County Health Department makes that plain.

County Health Commissioner Domke says the lumping together, in state law, of nursing, rest and boarding homes, makes enforcement "difficult and in some cases almost impossible." Legislation setting up separate standards for each of the three types of home would therefore be in order when the Legislature reconvenes.

More regular inspections are planned by the Health Department. But the problem does not stop with these aspects of legislation and inspection. There is the far larger problem of Missouri's custodial care of the aged, which is sadly lacking, and which has long been a major factor in making ineffective Missouri's treatment of its mentally ill.

What is needed is an over-all approach. In that approach would be at least three elements. First, proper standards for paid nursing, rest and boarding homes. Second, eleemosynary care of elderly people who cannot afford to pay their own way. Third, a program in which custodial care of the aged will not pre-empt rooms intended for and needed by the mentally ill, as it does now.

Mission to Peiping

Some time during the week between Christmas and New Year's Day, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations will fly to Peiping on a fateful mission.

His immediate purpose is to carry out the General Assembly resolution which condemned Communist China for illegally detaining American flyers, and called upon him to seek their return. He is approaching his task in the most correct possible way.

"I am not going anywhere to beg anybody for anything," he says. This is not a negotiation and not a good will mission, he points out. Rather he will present the views of the 47 nations which voted for the assembly resolution, and explain its background.

These limitations need not, however, diminish the great potential value of Mr. Hammarskjold's visit. Even if he does not come back with the release of the flyers—a strong possibility which must be fully taken into account—he can perform a most useful service for the long-run improvement of the Far Eastern situation. He can explain to Chou En-lai, from the vantage point of the U.N. secretariat's impartiality, yet with a wisdom based on close observation of American foreign policy near the source, that the United States does not in fact have aggressive designs upon the Peiping regime.

In a way, then, the Secretary General's opportunity and his mission are to try to save the Chinese Communists from their own propaganda. If they seriously believe that this country is bent upon the violent overthrow of their Government, they may follow a belligerent policy which will produce the clash they fear. If they can be convinced that despite a few firebrands and loose talkers the United States really demands of China only decent standards of international conduct, Peiping's rulers may be persuaded to give a second thought to their truculence.

May Dag Hammarskjold, by speaking frankly and speaking truthfully, accomplish that mission.

Mr. Chips

In his early '20s, he was as ambitious as any other young teacher. His dream was to get a headship in a really first-class school. After repeated trials and failures he realized his inadequacies and accepted fate and Brookfield with its ancient elms, its mantle of creeper, its playing fields—and a lesser name than Harrow. At 40 he was happy with his Latin classes and his lodgings at Mrs. Wickett's. At 50 he was senior on the faculty. And at 60 he was always the honor guest at dinners of Old Brookfieldians and arbiter of disputes about school history. Then came Sarajevo and the war and the younger men on the staff, as well as the boys, went off to France and the Somme. He became acting headmaster and in the chapel he read the names as the War Office reported the casualties. One moonlit night the Boche came over and dropped five bombs around Brookfield and killed nine villagers. But he went right on with the lower fourth in Latin as the shrapnel fell. "You cannot—umph—judge the importance of things—umph—by the noise they make. Oh, dear me, no." A little chuckle. "Maynard, turn to page 40 and begin at the bottom line." That was Mr. Chips—he always had ideas like that.

There are readers who will remember James Hilton for "Lost Horizon," but our guess is that long after Shangri-La is forgotten, Mr. Chips will be hurrying around Brookfield in his tattered gown. Goodby, Mr. Hilton.

Mississippi: A Third Bluff?

Mississippi's vote to abandon its public school system and educate its children in private schools if necessary to avoid desegregation is a gesture more defiant than practical.

South Carolina and Georgia, which earlier had adopted the same dubious device, could scarcely afford to put it into effect. For the result could only be to lower the general average of education, since these states stand near the bottom of every list showing the capacity of the states to support the education of their children, and pseudo-private schooling would surely cost more than public. Of the three states whose voters have now threatened to abandon public education, Mississippi could afford that dire step least, for it stands last among the 48 states in capacity to educate its children.

The likeliest guess is that all three gestures are bluffs. If there is any substance to them whatever, the substance is that opponents of desegregation have run out of sophistries for evading the plain mandate of the United States Constitution.

Meanwhile, let us not lose sight of the thousands of citizens in these three states who voted against turning their backs on public schooling. Particularly let us keep in hopeful view those like M. D. Collins, State Superintendent of Education in Georgia, who after the referendum in his state, stoutly declared, "We're going to continue to fight for an expanded educational opportunity for the children and teachers of Georgia."

We Would Rather Be Deaf

Quite a bit of quiet admiration of the English language must be ascribed to the way it grows—faster even than Topsy and, of course, longer. This comes home to us every time we buy a dictionary (they come apart much faster in an office like ours than at home) and turn to the back of the book for the list of new words. There are always some which even we have not heard!

But imagine Chaucer or Shakespeare, or even Dryden or Pope looking over our shoulder. They would not recognize a single one of those new words. As a matter of fact, they would not recognize a good many of the old ones in the regular part of the book. And some of them they would not like.

We are reminded of this by the discovery in Washington University's Student Life of a word which, for us at least, is new—and raw. The word is "audiology." (A member of the faculty is just back from the first Congress of the International Society of Audiology in Buenos Aires.) The word, we gather, concerns problems of hearing and deafness. But what's the matter with "hearing" and "deafness"? Must they be swallowed up in "audiology"?

If all the growth of the language is to be in that direction, the day may come when we spurn the services of an audiologist.

Merry day after Christmas!

EVER GOING TO MELT?

Country Christmas Way Back When

Holiday Recollection of Rural Life at the Century's Turn

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

It was a stingingly cold morning more than 50 years ago. The sun gave a crystal sheen to the deep snow that had fallen for days and was now frozen so hard the matched bays could not make a dent in it.

We children, warmly clad in woolen dresses with linsey-woolsey petticoats, hand-knitted wool stockings and mittens, high button shoes, and crocheted hoods with ice wool trimmings, were placed in the back of the wagon bed upon the bobsled. Straw half filled the bed. Over this was a thick wool blanket upon which we sat, with our feet against the heated rock Mama had prepared.

With the old wool crazy-patch quilt and the buffalo robe covering us we were eager to be gone. Papa on the spring seat in front clucked to the restless horses and we were off across country for the trip to Aunt Melissa and Uncle Bill's big white farmhouse where relatives always gathered on Christmas day.

The scrub oaks and hazelnut bushes leered at us like small sheeted ghosts, but Papa said they pointed out the way to him. The miles were quickly left behind for Nip and Tuck were in fine fettle and carried us along at a brisk pace.

Aunt Melissa, with her long black hair piled high upon her head and held by a carved tortoise-shell comb, dressed in her black alpaca with leg-o'-mutton sleeves and her blue checked cover-all apron, greeted us affectionately.

Gold Star With Tinsel Angels

Then Uncle Bill took his turn, whisking us upstairs to the big bedroom where a bright fire burned in the fireplace. The hit-and-miss rag carpet over its pallet of straw was a cushion for our eager feet. Wraps were placed on the massive four-poster, and Mama smoothed our braids and straightened hair ribbons before we went downstairs to greet other relatives.

The oldsters gathered about the roaring fire in the parlor, chatting and reminiscing while the children collected about the huge cedar, intricately festooned with strings of popcorn and paper chains, and the big gold star surrounded by tinsel angels in the tip-top. Surely nothing else in the world could have been half so lovely.

Suspended from the branches were big cooky boys and cooky girls dressed in white icing with multicolored candies sprinkled over the top, plump raisins for eyes, a row of currants for the mouth, small hickory nut kernels for ears. How hungrily we gazed upon their delectable beauty!

Soon all were seated at the tables—the grown-ups at the dining table, the children at the big table in the kitchen. Uncle Bill stood in the doorway to say grace, so we children knew we were included in his blessing.

Then Aunt Melissa served the turkey and the specialties for which she was famous among the kinfolks. Steamed plum pudding with brandy sauce was the meal's finale for the adults, but the children were given an extra dessert: Aunt Melissa's ginger-molasses cookies. Surely, no culinary achievement could have rivaled those tasty treats.

A Fairyland in Young Hearts

While the women washed dishes in the kitchen and the men smoked by the fireplace, the children withdrew to the bedroom across the hall and played checkers, old maid, carams and croquinole, with Aunt Melissa's china dolls in turtle shell cradles close at hand for cuddling.

At last we were called in to the parlor where Uncle Bill was ready to hand out the packages, wrapped and beribboned, that lay beneath the tree. How each child's heart fluttered when his name was called. The homemade toys, hand-knitted mittens and hoods, and the mosquito-netting bags filled with molasses taffy, horehound candy, and popcorn balls were gifts "beyond compare" to the sparkling-eyed youngsters.

After everyone had oh'd and ah'd over just-what-he-wanted gifts, all gathered about the old organ and sang carols to Aunt Melissa's accompaniment. There were some monotones in the group, but they joined in lustily with Uncle Bill's untrained, sweet-voiced tenor.

The waning afternoon signaled time for our reluctant departure. Wrapped and ready we stood in the cold hall and bowed our heads as Uncle Bill thanked God for the Babe of Bethlehem whose birthday we had just celebrated and invoked His special blessing upon all children everywhere.

Nostalgic memories of a white Christmas in the golden realm of childhood, and of Aunt Melissa and Uncle Bill, who made fairyland bloom in hearts that were young and eager.

Brick by Brick

From The Providence Bulletin

Congratulations to the rector of Nuorgam, in northern Finland, who wanted a brick church, and finally got one by mental ingenuity in an arctic place so cold that it's often hard to think at all.

The price of the bricks themselves was trivial, but the cost of shipping them to the arctic exceeded the money the rector had amassed. His solution was to have them mailed, brick by brick, each in its little package, each neatly stamped at the neighborhood post office. By now they have moved enough bricks for the entire church in this frugal fashion, at an item cost far below the one the commercial shipper could have made. The church is a fact. The rector of Nuorgam is content in the knowledge that heaven helps those who help themselves. But we're obliged to add: Heaven help the mailman on his route.

The Night Before the Morning After

From The New Republic.

'Twas the night before Christmas, an annual venture.
Not a creature was stirring, not even a censure.
The issues were hung undisturbed in the air
In the hope that no one would notice them there.
The Congress was nestled all snug in its bed,
While visions of '56 danced through its head.
Mamie in her kerchief and Ike in his cap
Had just settled in for a newspaperless nap,
When by Harry's back porch there arose such hallooing,
Ike sprang from the bed to see what Joe was doing.
It took only one moment to set matfers clear,
For out in Wisconsin they don't raise reindeer.
Ike sighed and he smiled, his fears were all laid;
It was only the gent from the Macy's parade,
Who reined in his deer, as if he controlled them,
As he sat in a chrome-plated sleigh from G.M.
Then up leaped the deer from where they'd been standing,
Came soft on the roof like the Columbine landing.
He left them untethered for they were so tame
And, quick as a contract, down the chimney he came.
He was a round little man, replete with affection,
As dear to Ike's heart as a landslide election.
He said not a word (or he wouldn't be quoted)
But opened the bag full of treasures he toted,
Began to unload all the rich Christmas rations,
Leaving first a kind word for the United Nations.
He offered to put between war and peace, distance,
By leaving the hope of, at least, coexistence.
He left dixon for Yates and a yates there for Dixon.
And a new plain, cloth coat for Mrs. Nixon.
Some new clothes for Mamie, a golf ball for Dwight
And then up the chimney he rose out of sight.
His take-off was swift from the White House high ridges,
On Adams! On Dulles! Soft Knowland! Soft Bridges!
And Ike heard him exclaim as he drove out of sight,
"Merry Christmas to all and to all a good-night."

Gen. Phillips Says Manpower Cut Will Offset U.S. Atomic Gains in Race With Soviet Union

Dulles's Statement on 'Increasing Strength' Puzzles Army — Pentagon Faces Task of Reducing Numbers but Keeping Divisions Combat Ready.

(Brig. Gen. Phillips herein discusses implications of the order to reduce manpower in the armed forces. It was written before information became available on the Army plan to release some draftees ahead of time.)

By BRIG. GEN. THOMAS R. PHILLIPS, U.S.A. (Ret.)
Military Analyst of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.

BOTH the Administration and the Pentagon got their signals crossed in connection with the prospective reduction of the armed forces announced last week by Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson. The Army, Navy and Marine Corps, which are being reduced 403,000 men in the next eighteen months, have no firm plans about how it is to be done.

Wilson did not know whether the Army would have to reduce the number of its divisions, whether it would reduce all units by a percentage, or whether the various units would have sub-units extracted from them.

The Navy does not yet know whether its reductions will be made by further cutting ships' complements, by placing more ships in mothballs, or by eliminating obsolete items in the Navy as suggested by Assistant Navy Secretary for Air James H. Smith.

Wilson Defends Move.

The Secretary of Defense defended the reduction in the military establishment on the basis that the President had suggested and approved it and that no one in the world was more capable than President Eisenhower of making a wise decision on a problem of this nature.

He also defended it as a small reduction—3 to 5 per cent—and therefore not of great importance.

This figure was applicable to the additional cut made in the next six months and not to the whole program which is about 12½ per cent over-all and about 25 per cent for the Army.

He contended that the United States has reached a very strong military position with large numbers of trained men back in civil life, who could be made available, and with a very large stockpile of military equipment and munitions.

Wilson let himself be drawn into a discussion about the effect that larger or smaller forces might have had on events in the recent past.

"I don't think a thing different would have happened," he said, "than has happened in the world the last two years if we had twice as many men under arms . . . and building up a big military organization is not the solution for our country to help solve the problems of the world."

Some of the press misinterpreted this statement as a defense of the reduction on the basis that the chances for peace in the world were better today.

Hard for Dulles to Take.

This was difficult for Secretary of State John Foster Dulles to swallow, and at his press conference the next day he was reported as saying that although the Soviet Union appears to have stopped cooing and to have resumed old-fashioned threats, its long-range objectives are unchanged and the danger of war is undiminished.

The Secretary of State, who is becoming known in the Pentagon as the "Grand Strategist of Foggy Bottom—Foggy Bottom is the old Washington name for the area in which the State Department building stands—then went ahead to state, in effect, that the reductions were made possible by the development of atomic weapons and "it isn't logical at all to assume that your strength depends upon keeping in being precisely what used to be under other conditions a principal means of force" (referring to ground forces).

Dulles discussed the "forward" strategy of SHAPE, saying that it now is possible with the help of tactical atomic weapons to prevent Europe from being overrun. He also reaffirmed his deterrent strategy, and reliance in most areas of the world upon "the deterrent of striking power as an effective defense." He again referred to building a strategic reserve of land forces and relying at the front line "primarily on sea and an air power."

Dulles also said that even though our military manpower is reduced, "we shall have more strength increasingly every year."

Highly Debatable Remarks.

Almost everything on military subjects that Dulles had to say is highly debatable.

It is true that our strength is increasing as more and more hydrogen weapons are manufactured and as the strategic air force gets new and more efficient aircraft, but the military planners are looking ahead three to five years and see with dismay that the Soviet Union's atomic weapons, although not so numerous as ours, will be available in large enough numbers to produce a nuclear stalemate which the Western powers will not dare to break. By the same time, the Russians will have the long-range high-speed aircraft to deliver their bombs on us.

Consequently, although the United States and the West are growing stronger in striking power, they are growing weaker in comparison to the Soviet Union, and, as the atomic superiority disappears, it will be necessary to reach a better posture with conventional forces which Dulles is now writing off.

When troops were being withdrawn from the Far East a year ago the desirability of building a mobile strategic reserve was emphasized. It was pointed out that forces were being reduced as fast or faster than troops were being brought home. Consequently the mobile strategic reserve was not being built up.

The same thing is happening again. Dulles argued that "the processes of building up a strategic reserve of land forces . . . is a policy which we adopted over a year ago and what is going on now is merely an application of that policy."

The Army does not understand how it goes about building a strategic reserve while losing more than 300,000 men or about 25 per cent of its strength.

The Strategic Reserve.

The Army's strategic reserve at the present time consists of one airborne, one armored and one infantry division. All the other divisions in the United States are "companion" units to overseas divisions.

Their function is to train replacements for their overseas companions and then once in three years to build themselves up and rotate with divisions overseas.

The overseas division, when it comes home, discharges its selectees and commences a training mission and finally gets ready to go back overseas after three years.

The divisions in the States going through this process will be ready divisions only for the month or so before they go overseas. During most of the 36 months in the States they will be in such an untrained and under-strength state that it will require nine months to make them ready for war.

Today there are 10 divisions overseas, 10 companion divisions in the United States and three divisions not in the rotation system as a strategic reserve.

The Secretary of Defense spoke of reducing Army strength either on a percentage basis or by eliminating sub-units. The "more defense for less money" slogan of the Administration forces it to play the numbers game. It cannot have fewer divisions than it had before and claim more defense.

In fact, the number of divisions has been increased recently in face of reductions in strength. This has been done by turning training units into companion "divisions" and by having the 10 companion divisions at 20 or 25 per cent of strength while they perform training functions.

The Army, on the other hand, will hold out for keeping its overseas and strategic reserve divisions at full strength and adequately backed up by logistic and supporting units.

The Army never again wants to be caught in the situation it was in when the Korean war started. Gen. MacArthur's four divisions had one battalion in each regiment inactive and much of its artillery was missing.

Front Line Readiness.

The Army feels that its troops overseas are in the front line and must have the capability of fighting without any preliminary build up, training or preparation of logistic facilities.

The big argument in the Pentagon will be about the Army's efforts to keep its overseas divisions from being turned into facades called divisions, but unready and unable to maintain themselves in combat for more than a few days because of lack of logistic support.

Secretary Dulles said there was no "present intention" of taking any United States troops out of Europe. This leaves only the Far East as a source of withdrawing divisions for demobilization.

When one Marine division has been withdrawn from Korea there will be in the Far East three Army divisions in Korea and one Army and one Marine division in Japan. One Army division is in reserve in Hawaii and two Marine divisons will be in reserve in the United States.

The question of withdrawing more divisions from the Far East is a political and not a military decision. As the Japanese develop their own defense forces, all United States troops can be withdrawn from Japan. It is difficult to assess the problem in Korea. United States troops are needed there almost as much to hold the redoubtable old patriot, Syngman Rhee, in check as to discourage further aggressions from the north.

The Army is already examining every detachment and force it has around the world looking for savings in manpower. Even the American staff in Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther's Supreme Allied Headquarters in Europe will feel the ax, as will American military missions around the world. No saving is too petty. 100 men in Panama, 50 in Alaska or 10 in Turkey.

At the same time, the tables of organization will be re-examined —this has been done recently—to try to make percentage reductions all the way down the line and still leave military organizations able to function in battle.

All this will not amount to anything near 343,000 men and there will be no recourse to meet strength figures, unless the supposedly ready divisions overseas and in strategic reserve are emasculated, except to withdraw units from overseas.

U.N. Faces Knotty Problem Over Cyprus; Morality Seems to Point One Way, Military Strategy Another

British, Greek, Turkish Interests Involved — Communist Strength a Factor.

By WILLIAM K. WYANT
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff.

WHAT the United Nations should do about the island of Cyprus, British bastion in the eastern Mediterranean sea, is one of those cantankerous international problems in which morality seems to point one way and high military strategy another. The issues are more complicated than they appear on the surface.

Riots broke out anew in Greece and Cyprus after the U.N.'s recent failure to act on the Greek government's proposal that self-determination for Cypriots be indorsed. Greece wants to annex Cyprus, about three-fourths Greek in population. A large number of Cypriots would prefer Greek rule to the island's present status as a British Crown Colony.

Britain, now dislodged by Egypt from the Suez Canal area, insists that possession of the strategic island is essential to the defense of Britain and the Free World. The United States supports the British view, and the U.N., for a time at least, has decided to do nothing that might upset the Middle East apple cart.

Turkey Influences U.N.

Turkey's opposition to a change in the status of Cyprus was a major factor in the U.N.'s decision, which first was indicated when the General Assembly's Political Committee voted 28 to 15 to give priority to New Zealand's proposal "not to consider further" the dispute over the island.

Later, the General Assembly itself voted 50 to 0 to drop the Cyprus question. The eight countries that abstained from voting included the Soviet bloc as well as other nations that did not participate because they believed the U.N. could not legally interfere in Cyprus.

Diplomats were apprehensive lest U.N. intervention reopen old wounds and destroy the Balkan Friendship Pact between Turkey, Yugoslavia and Greece. The Turkish Moslem minority on Cyprus, about 90,000 persons against some 400,000 members of the Greek Orothodox faith, bitterly opposes the "enosis" movement for union with Greece.

The arguments for Cypriot self-determination appeal strongly to Americans who believe the right of a people to set up their own government is over-riding. Basically, the position of Greece is that the predominantly Greek electorate of Cyprus should be permitted to vote under U.N. supervision and decide for themselves what their political future is to be.

Greeks point out that in 1950 the Independent Cypriote Church, a branch of the Greek Orthodox, organized a plebicite on "enosis." The British tolerated the straw ballot, but gave it no official recognition. When votes were counted, they were 95 per cent in favor of union with Greece, a move strongly indorsed by the Cypriote Church.

Discounts British Fears.

Confident that self-determination would mean eventual Greek sovereignty over Cyprus, the Greek Government discounts expressed British fears of a Communist coup on the island. Greece also has given assurance that a Greek-ruled Cyprus would continue to be available for British and NATO military bases. After all, the Greeks say, is not Greece a member of NATO and a proved ally of Britain?

Britain's stand has received, generally speaking, a less sympathetic press than that of Greece. The British lion, licking his wounds after expulsion from Egypt, has been portrayed as cleaving blindly and stubbornly to Cyprus as a vestigial remnant of Empire, a remnant worthless for defense purposes in the atomic age, but at least a foot-on-the-ground.

The British, however, have some cogent arguments. Put briefly, their position is that British title to Cyprus is legally unassailable; that Cyprus affairs are a domestic matter in which the U.N. has no right to intervene; that Communists on Cyprus would make havoc in the absence of a strong hand, and, above all, that Cyprus is of tremendous strategic importance.

At this moment, the British are transferring troops from the Suez Canal area to new garrisons on Cyprus. Airport runways have been lengthened. A major naval base is in the making at Famagusta, on the east coast. Their Egyptian experience did not put Britons in the mood to entrust all this to the whims and vagaries of an unstable government.

Warning of Civil War.

If a U.N. plebiscite on Cyprus were held the British profess to foresee no such peaceable transition to Greek rule as do proponents of "enosis." What would happen, they say, is that Cypriot Communists would vote for self-determination, then join the Turkish minority in opposing union with Greece. They say the result would be civil war on Cyprus, confusion for NATO and triumph for Moscow.

There is disagreement as to the Red potential on Cyprus. By British estimate, approximately three-sevenths of Greek Cypriots are Communist. The Turks say 65 per cent of the popular vote is Communist.

Cyprus in Pictures

RECENT rioting by Greek advocates of the union of Cyprus with Greece is the subject of a full-page of photographs, with accompanying text, on Page 3 of today's PICTURES. Students, aroused by United States support in the United Nations of Britain's stand on Cyprus, are shown demonstrating against both the United States and Britain.

Two-fifths of the island's work force is said to be Communist-controlled. Britons point out that Reds on Cyprus opposed "enosis" until three years ago, when they changed their tack, presumably, the British say, on instructions from Moscow.

"How effectively would the Greek Government deal with a Red coup on Cyprus?" the British ask. Athens is 500 miles west of the island. Proponents of union, both on Cyprus and off, say the internal Red threat has been greatly exaggerated. The cry of Red, it is charged, is a classic reaction of governments defending the status quo at all costs.

Strategic considerations weigh heaviest in the statement of the British case. Cyprus, mountainous and rather bare, scenically lovely, is tucked in the Mediterranean's northeast corner 40 miles off the Turkish coast and 75 west of Syria. A stationary but unsinkable aircraft carrier, it provides cover for the oil reservoirs of the Middle East and for two of the world's most vital water channels, the Suez Canal and the Dardanelles.

Declaring that they could no more give up Cyprus than Gibraltar, their base at the other end of the Mediterranean, spokesmen for London point out that Britain has obligations in the East that are separate from her obligations to NATO.

Possible Conflict.

For example, Britain, France and the United States have a tripartite agreement under which they guarantee the security of Israel and the Arab States. If war broke out, could British forces operate from a Greek-controlled base against a nation with which Greece was not at war?

Again, there is the possibility that Britain might have to re-occupy the Suez Canal base. The British regard Cyprus as a nodal point in the Anglo-American defense system and headquarters for Her Majesty's Middle East Land Forces.

From the standpoint of offensive operations, Cyprus is less than three hours from Moscow by jet aircraft and about an hour from the Russian oil fields at Baku, on the Caspian sea.

Background for these claims and counter-claims is an island which has a long and fascinating history. Greek colonists came to Cyprus as early as 1400 B.C., but the 3572-square-mile territory, a treasure trove for archaeologists, has never been part of modern Greece. Cypriots knew many masters before the British, among them the Phoenicians, the Egyptians, the Romans, the Saracens, the Crusaders and, worst of all, the Turks.

Great Britain took over the administration of Cyprus in 1878 as part of a defensive alliance with Turkey against Russia. The Sultan continued to receive annual "tribute" money. When war broke out with Turkey in 1914, Britain annexed Cyprus. In 1929, Greeks on the island's legislative council began agitating seriously against British rule.

British Put Down Revolt.

Two years later, in 1931, the movement flamed into a revolt which the British put down with troops shipped in from Malta and Egypt. The revolt's leaders were deported, and their number included two bishops of the Cypriote Church. Then, as now, the church was credited with stirring up enthusiasm for "enosis." Then, as now, the British said the trouble had its wellsprings on the mainland.

British administration, practically everybody agrees, has vastly improved living conditions. The death rate on Cyprus is now second lowest in the world. The island is free of malaria. Commerce has been expanded. Seven hundred miles of asphalt roads have been built. There is an expanding tourist trade. Cyprus remains, however, a drain on the British treasury to the amount of £20,000,000 a year.

Claiming they want Cypriots to have self-government, the British point out they offered a constitution in 1948. It was rejected. The British have now proposed another constitution which they admit is less liberal. It was necessary to make it so, the British say, in order to avoid Communist domination and risk another British Guiana.

Cyprus bears evidence of occupation by a succession of cultures. The ancient goddess of love, Aphrodite, was believed to have been born of sea-foam nearby, and Paphos was the center for her worship. Alexander the Great ruled for a while, then Ptolemy of Egypt. In the Roman period, Cicero was among the island's governors. Paul and Mark visited Cyprus, as did Barnabas.

Conquered By King Richard.

Later, in the seventh through the tenth centuries, Cyprus suffered repeated Arab incursions. Richard the Lion-Hearted conquered the island en route to the Third Crusade. He married Queen Berengaria there, then sold out to the Templars, who quickly tired of their bargain and turned Cyprus over to Guy de Lusignan, King of Jerusalem.

One of history's most melancholy fates awaited Gen. Bragadino of the Venetian Republic, which held sway over Cyprus from 1487 until 1570. The scene was Famagusta, port town which was the reputed home of Othello the Moor. Invading Turks had butchered 20,000 persons at Lefkosia. Famagusta, under Bragadino, held out under seige for more than 10 months.

Terms of honorable surrender finally were arranged, the Turks agreeing not to molest defenders or inhabitants. When Bragadino went to deliver the keys of the city to the Turkish pasha, however, the vengeful Turk went back on his word. He had the Italian flayed alive and sent the skin, stuffed with hay, to the Sultan.

Underdeveloped Areas of World Are Drifting Toward Communism

lated by a brilliant young M.I.T. economist and lecturer at the Navy War College, Francis M. Bator. Bator's argument begins with two very large numbers: In 1953 the United States produced some 366 billion dollars worth of goods and services. This year it looks as if we will have produced only about 356 billion dollars worth. The difference is 10 billion dollars worth of everything from handkerchiefs to automobiles — stuff we could have produced, but did not.

But meanwhile, says Bator, our capacity to produce has been increasing. New machines were ordered some years ago and now have been built and put in place in factories. Some 70,000 new workers have grown up, left school and entered the labor force.

One way or another, Bator arrives at the conclusion that we now have an unused capacity to produce totaling some 30 billion dollars worth of goods and services a year and that this unused capacity is growing at the rate of one billion dollars a month. In time, Bator believes, this mounting "unused capacity to produce" spells recession or depression—idle machines and idle men.

Blessing in Disguise?

If, however, we choose to take advantage of this unused capacity, he believes it may be a blessing in disguise, just as the fact that the United States in 1941 had a considerable unused capacity to produce, left over from the great depression, enabled us to produce war goods rapidly in the emergency of World War II. Only in this instance, our unused capacity would be used to make production goods and machinery for the underdeveloped areas, enabling them to raise their standards of living and to develop into self-respecting nations, non-Communist because they had found a way to develop that is better than the Communist way.

The mechanism, of course, would be to lend and give two billion dollars a year to the underdeveloped countries from the United States Treasury. This money would then be used to buy American machine tools and other production goods for use of the underdeveloped nations in their developmental schemes, for building everything from roads and hospitals to hydro-electric plants.

In the process, the United States budgetary deficit would be increased, but not, incidentally, by two billion dollars a year if Bator's calculations are correct.

Since the purchases of the underdeveloped nations in the United States would stimulate business and industry here, putting to work our unused production capacity, including our unemployed, it would increase tax receipts for the Treasury. To be sure, there would be some increase in the national debt, which already stands at something like 275 billion dollars, but, Bator points out, while the interest on that debt is some six billion dollars a year, that is income paid to ourselves, to United States bond holders.

Size of National Debt.

Whether the national debt is too large is, of course, a controversial question, but Bator believes it is not. He points out that the percentage of our national income devoted to paying interest on the national debt has increased by only .4 per cent since 1868, and that the United Kingdom in the heyday of the British Empire paid more than three times, percentage-wise, the present United States debt service charge.

Whether the proposed increase in the national debt would be inflationary is another question. Bator and many other economists hold that inflation can occur only when demands for goods and services approach our capacity to produce such goods and services.

If the United States contributed two billion dollars for a developmental program and another five billion dollars for increased armed defenses, the purchasing power of the workers involved in this new production would, of course, be higher than the total of seven billion dollars for their wages would be spent by them, then re-spent by the storekeepers where they bought their groceries and other goods.

It is Bator's firm opinion, however, that inflation would not occur. He believes that the 30 billion dollars of unused capacity to produce in our economy is much more than enough "slack" to prevent an inflationary effect.

All of which is not to say that an adequate program for the development of the underdeveloped areas could be financed by the United States without real "cost" to us. If it were decided not to increase the national debt, taxes would have to be raised.

And in any event, the unused productivé capacity of our economy might be used for any purpose we chose. By lowering income taxes we could free funds for the purchase of consumer goods by Americans, raising still higher our standard of living, already many times higher than the world ever has known before.

The M.I.T. Center for International Studies staff believes, however, that once the people of the United States come to understand the immensity of the issue at stake in the underdeveloped areas of the world, Americans will prefer to devote a portion of their unused productive capacity to a world developmental program, to build a constructive alternative to Communism for the people of Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America.

China Expected to Ask High Price for Airmen's Release

Seized Russian Tanker May Play Part in Decision — U.N. Is Placed Under Heavy Strain.

By MARQUIS W. CHILDS
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
(Copyright, 1954, The Pulitzer Publishing Co.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.

IN SEEKING to obtain the freedom of the 11 American airmen held as "spies" by the Chinese Communists, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Dag Hammarskjold, faces his severest test and the U.N. is put under a grave strain.

Every indication is that the Red Chinese will ask a high price for freeing the Americans. Whether it is a price the United States will be willing to pay, no one can confidently predict.

The price will inevitably be high because Americans have made no secret of their anger and indignation at this defiant action by the Red regime in contradiction of all the conventions of the war that was being waged when the airmen were captured. This has given the Communists, for whom human life is of small moment whether of individuals or in the mass, the idea that they can make large demands in return for release of the flyers.

Tanker May Play Part.

Those who have followed the negotiations thus far believe that the Chinese Communists are likely to link the release of the Americans with a demand from China's partner, Soviet Russia, for the release of the Soviet tanker, Tuapse, seized with its crew by the Chinese Nationalists last June 23 and held ever since.

The Tuapse, one of Russia's largest tankers, was seized by Chinese Nationalist gunboats at a point between the Philippines and the southern tip of Formosa and convoyed to a Formosan port. The Chinese Nationalists decreed that they had a right to confiscate the Tuapse because (1) it was sailing to a "closed port," Shanghai, and (2) because the cargo of kerosene it was carrying was destined for the China Petroleum Co., a state-owned subsidiary of the Communist regime.

On Aug. 4, Moscow sent a protest note to Washington against aerial buzzing of Soviet ships by United States planes attached to the Seventh Fleet patroling the straits of Formosa. Included in this protest was the charge that the United States was directly responsible for the seizure of the Tuapse and its crew. The State Department rejected that protest.

Again on Sept. 30, when Russia proposed before the U.N. that the United States be charged with aggression for maintaining the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa, the seizure of the Tuapse was cited as an example of United States violation of freedom of navigation.

Two Polish Ships.

In addition, the Chinese Nationalists have taken two Polish vessels, the President Gottwald on May 13 and the Praca in October 1953. These ships were confiscated on the ground that they were really the property of the Chinese Communists with the Polish flag merely a disguise. Some support for this was cited in the fact that the crews of the two ships were mixed Polish and Chinese.

In October of this year it was announced by Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. and Under Secretary of State Herbert Hoover Jr. that 22 of the Poles had been given asylum in the United States under a special provision of the immigration laws.

Quite conceivably, according to those close to the problem, the Chinese Communists will ask for the return of the three vessels and their crews as a quid pro quo for release of the American flyers. This might well be coupled with a demand for a United States pledge that shipping to and from Chinese mainland ports will not be interfered with.

Such demands would almost certainly be rejected, particularly in so far as the crew members granted asylum are concerned. Even agreement to bring about return of the seized ships would bring an immediate outcry from ardent supporters of the Chinese Nationalists such as Senate Majority Leader William F. Knowland. Far from approving any relaxation of the present limited restrictions on shipping to the mainland, Knowland is publicly advocating a tight blockade of the coast if present efforts to free the Americans are unsuccessful.

Effect of Blockade.

Whether the Chinese Communists would take such a blockade as an act of war, as President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles have said it would be, can only be speculated on. It may be significant that intelligence reports, in which considerable credence is placed, have it that the Red Chinese are being trained in submarine operation with modern Soviet submarines. Moscow could lend-lease these submarines to Peiping for use in circumventing a blockade.

One thing seems certain and that is that almost none of America's U.N. partners in the Korean war would feel obliged to join in action against Communist China should the United States become involved. The British have made this quite clear in an official statement in the House of Commons, and that British statement reflects the viewpoint of the Western Allies.

Diplomats who have followed United States efforts to release the flyers point out that as long ago as last summer during the Geneva conference the Chinese Communists let it be known that they meant to keep the flyers. There was even a suggestion at that time that they would denounce them publicly as "spies" and then shortly afterward release them.

These same observers have felt that quiet negotiations carried on through intermediaries might have been preferable to the present method of public denunciation and counter-denunciation, yet there is hope that the present U.N. effort will succeed. It is argued that Foreign Minister Chou En-lai, a shrewd and resourceful bargainer, would never have let Hammarskjold start on his long journey if the answer was simply to be no or demands so impossible as to preclude acceptance.

FORMOSA PREMIER SAYS REDS PLAN NEW PEARL HARBOR

TAIPEH, Dec. 25 (AP)—Nationalist China's Premier O. K. Yui said today Russia is "actively preparing for invasion of the Pacific area and a new Pearl Harbor might be in the offing."

Yui, addressing the annual Christmas reunion of national assemblymen, said his government intends to direct all its efforts toward making Nationalist China strong enough to invade the Red China mainland.

He said there must be no relaxing of the resently-signed mutual defense pact which pledges United States assistance to the defense of Formosa and the nearby Pescadores.

"With Red China under their control, the Kremlin gangsters are actively preparing for invasion of the Pacific area," Yui asserted.

Speaking of Nationalist military strength, he said Nationalist divisions are roughly one-third stronger, division for division, than Red Chinese divisions used in the Korean war.

Bolivian Political Amnesty.

LA PAZ, Bolivia, Dec. 25 (AP)—The Bolivian government announced a Christmas amnesty for 303 political prisoners and for 38 political exiles. Among the exiles who now may return to the country if they wish is former Foreign Minister Eduardo Arze Matienzo, ex-commissioner for the United Nations in Eritrea.

U.N. TO QUIT FLYING SUPPLIES, MEN TO 3 KOREA AIRPORTS

MUNSAN, Korea, Dec. 25 (AP)—The United Nations Command today notified the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and the Communists that it will discontinue bringing military supplies and manpower into three airports in South Korea, effective Jan. 1.

Maj. Gen. Leslie D. Carter, senior Allied member of the Military Armistice Commission, said in a letter the three airports are at Seoul, Kunsan and Kangnung.

Carter gave no reason for the discontinuance other than to say "we just couldn't do any business at those places anymore." He said operations previously at Seoul city air base will be transferred to nearby Kimpo, which is linked with Inchon as a port of entry.

On Jan. 5, the Fifth Air Force will turn operational control of the Seoul base over to the South Korean air force. The Fifth already has shifted most of its facilities to Kimpo, about 28 miles from Seoul.

The U.N. Command will continue to use Inchon and Pusan as ports of entry.

PEIPING REPORTS 2 NEW HIGHWAYS OPEN IN TIBET

TOKYO, Dec. 25 (AP)—The Peiping Communist radio said two new Chinese highways into Lhasa, Tibet, were formally opened today.

One, 1380 miles long and almost 10,000 feet above sea level at some points, leads from Yaan (Yachow) in Sikang province, west of Chungking, into Tibet from the east.

The other, 1280 miles long and up to more than 13,000 feet above sea level at spots, is from Sining, in Tsinghai province, northwest of Lanchow, into Tibet from the northeast. Both roads follow age-old caravan routes.

Japan to Buy Burmese Rice.

TOKYO, Dec. 25 (AP)—Japan and Burma today signed an agreement for Japanese purchase of 220,000 tons of Burmese rice in the Japanese fiscal year beginning April 1. Price was set at $126 a ton.

NEHRU EXPECTING HAMMARSKJOLD TO VISIT HIM ON JAN. 2

NEW DELHI, Dec. 25 (UP)—Prime Minister Nehru expects to see United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold here on Jan. 2 on Hammarskjold's trip to Peiping to discuss the release of 11 imprisoned American airmen, it was reported today.

Nehru is said to have received through the Indian Ambassador at Peiping photostatic copies of depositions made by the Americans and also a list of the equipment reportedly taken from them.

The information was forwarded to him in anticipation of his talks with Hammarskjold.

The Reds are holding the Americans on spy charges despite the fact they were captured in uniform and, according to the United Nations, were shot down over North Korea during the Korean hostilities.

MOSCOW SAYS IT IS ACTING TO BLOCK ATOM WAR BY WEST

LONDON, Dec. 25 (UP)—The Moscow radio said today the Russians are "taking all steps necessary" to thwart western plans to use atomic weapons in case of war.

It said a decision at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting in Paris last week on the use of atomic weapons "aroused grave alarm" in many quarters.

"The Soviet people cannot overlook facts which show that aggressive quarters of the United States, Britain and France are steering a course toward atomic war," the broadcast said. "They are watching all maneuvers and machinations of the imperialist aggressors to take all steps necessary to frustrate these plans in good time."

TITO AT INDIAN ICE SHOW

NEW DELHI, India, Dec. 25 (AP) — Yugoslavia's President Marshal Josip (Tito) Broz was guest of honor today at an ice carnival staged especially for him in Simla, the former summer capital of the British viceroys 7000 feet up in the Himalayas.

Tito, on a tour of India, saw Himalayan folk dances and skating in Simla's snow-clad setting surrounded by great peaks.

How a Writer Learned Life

Frank, Even Brutal Revelations in Diaries of Stendhal.

THE PRIVATE DIARIES OF STENDHAL (Henri-Marie Beyle). Edited and translated from the French, by Robert Sage. Illustrated. (Doubleday, 550 pgs., $7.50.)

Reviewed by
HERMAN SCHNURER

STENDHAL

WHEN Stendhal wrote "The Red and the Black" and "La Chartreuse de Parme," he was well past middle age. He had spent long years of training before he found himself.

At first blush, the reader of these diaries may think "floundering" is a better word. Henri Beyle—alias Stendhal, and, later on, Bombet, Cotonet, Visconti—seeks service in the army, at the staff level preferably. He engages in vigorous lobbying to secure a prefecture, one of the juicier plums in Napoleon's tight administrative regime. He goes into the grocery business. He tries, unsuccessfully, to get his prudent and fairly prosperous father and favorite whipping boy to set him up in the banking business about which Stendhal knows less than nothing. Object: quick riches. He even daydreams of becoming a colonial carpetbagger at Pondichery, in French India.

He does not expect any great enjoyment out of any of these pursuits. He doesn't want them in themselves. What he wants to do is to love and be loved by women, and to theorize about the subject at will. He wants to be a comic playwright and, to that end, he forever drafts impossible versions of a play, Lettelner, which he finally recognizes as hopeless. He reads voraciously, if unsystematically, sees every play he can get to, takes lessons in acting, savors in advance the prestige, conquests, money and power which dramatic success would bring him.

ABOVE all, he watches himself and everyone around him for the revealing action or words which epitomize a person, a moment, a feeling. With constant practice, he will improve at it. Later in life, he will verbalize it better. He will find friends with whom to exchange this sort of riches (when they aren't trading insults, appreciated almost equally). He will gain adeptness at providing himself with the necessary "three or four cubic feet of ideas per day." For the time being, he sets everything down—for himself, first of all, frankly, often cynically, brutally, even grossly. If there is no paper, there are envelopes, slippers, the back of playing cards and even his suspenders (on which he marks down the date of an important moment in his love life).

These diaries run from 1801 to 1814. They are connected by a biographical and critical narrative, and by pertinent passages from Stendhal's correspondence which clarify this period of his life.

The Napoleonic adventure overshadows these 13 years. We see young Beyle, hardly 17, newly arrived in Milan. He is shortly commissioned a second lieutenant, through the influence of his powerful cousin, Pierre Daru. A stupefying drama is taking place right before Stendhal's eyes. This is the campaign which catapults Napoleon to Vienna—before dragging him to Moscow and Waterloo. This part of it doesn't interest Stendhal particularly. There is nothing which attracts him less than being a hero — though he surely is not a poltroon.

It is Italy which intoxicates him, and for life. Henceforth all his nostalgias will center on Milan.

AS the narrative advances, we see him go back and forth between the army, civilian life and various administrative posts, mostly in the auxiliary services of the army, the most intriguing job being the one he is best equipped for: selecting (translate: plundering) books from German libraries for institutions back in France.

The most memorable pages in these diaries are the ones describing burning towns, the anarchy of retreats, the more absurd and incoherent aspects of modern carnage—the whole told with deadly calm, as is the recital of Waterloo in "La Chartreuse de Parme." This is the sort of observation which delighted Merimee, his great admirer—Merimee, the master of hardboiled writing, whose impassive ferocity makes Hemingway look like a boy scout.

If the writing is uneven and often unconsciously amusing, that is because Stendhal really does set these things down just for himself. The reader should not expect anything like the effects in the Goncourt brothers or in Jules Renard. This "D'Jornal," as Stendhal calls it in the quaint English he practices throughout these diaries, avoids color. Already, Stendhal has come to a reasoned and abiding stylistic decision: no eloquence!

—ESSAYS— James Farrell Reviews His Half Century

REFLECTIONS AT FIFTY, by James T. Farrell. (Vanguard, 224 pgs., $3.75.)

JACK ALDRIDGE

AS the title indicates, the author of the famous "Studs Lonigan" trilogy is now 50 years old, and in this volume are gathered some searching essays which are sure to add luster to his reputation as a commentator on The American Scene.

James T. Farrell, of Chicago and Paris, has written literary criticism before. This book includes pieces on Dreiser, Sherwood Anderson, James Joyce and Henrik Ibsen, as well as H. L. Mencken, that are warm as well as inquisitive and meaningful.

But, in the main, what Farrell has to say in his half-century book is primarily of interest to those who wish to understand the author's own novels; his views on Marxism and literary values, extreme naturalism as distinguished from pure sociology, and the measures of artistic freedom.

This reviewer would like to have been able to read "Reflections at Fifty" in the mid-'30s when "Studs Lonigan" was first published. Certainly a great many misconceptions of what Farrell was trying to do would never have arisen if a finished and genuine statement of his creed as an artist, as this volume is, had been available.

SINCE then Farrell has written and published a great many books—no less than twenty-nine—and he is no longer confused with the bespectacled character he created, the chronicler of Studs Lonigan's drab existence, Danny O'Neill.

Perhaps the most interesting item in this collection of essays is a literal transcript of Mr. Farrell's courtroom testimony in 1948 under direct and cross-examination, when he and his publishers, The Vanguard Press, brought a successful restrainment suit against the Philadelphia police for interfering with the sale of his books in that city. As a defense of his life's work, it is also a coherent and trenchant indictment of narrow-mindedness everywhere.

A DRAWING BY EDWARD A. WILSON FROM PAUL M. ANGLE'S "BY THESE WORDS"

ALTHOUGH there are too many things "wrong" with our country these days, there are also a lot of things that are "right." One of the latter is the appearance of books like these—books that give the reader pride in his nation and that help him see why each individual citizen should do his part to make it better than it is.

"Profile of America" is, as it is subtitled, "an autobiography of the U.S.A." From William Bradford of Plymouth Colony to David Sarnoff of Radio Corporation of America, men and women who have helped make this land what it is tell bits of their stories in their own words.

The handsome book of both pictures and text quotes from Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Monroe, Webster and Emerson; from Roger Williams, John Peter Zenger and Thomas A. Edison; from Lincoln, John Brown and Samuel Gompers; from Booker T. Washington, Susan B. Anthony and Carry A. Nation, and dozens of others.

Each selection is chosen so as to tell not only about the writer but about a problem. Thus there is a view of the Illinois frontier by the noted pioneer, Morris Birkbeck, the ideas of Oliver LaFarge on how "to set the Indians free" and the informed comments of Robert M. Hutchins on "the higher learning in America."

Words can be much more than words as Paul M. Angle shows in his collection of 46 documents and addresses out of the American past that have moved men and women to historic deeds. The span is from the two-paragraph Mayflower Compact of 1620 about which only a few knew at the time of its signing to Dwight D. Eisenhower's inaugural in 1953 that thousands witnessed and millions heard and saw on television and radio.

Mr. Angle, author of "Bloody Williamson," former librarian of the Illinois State Historical Library and now director of the Chicago Historical Society, gives the setting for each of the documents in a vivid narrative that makes the past come alive. And he is as inspirational in the protection of the great liberties as he is in the preservation of the nation in time of war.

The black and white drawings by Edward A. Wilson help recreate these notable events that serve as milestones of our democracy.

"TWELVE AMERICANS SPEAK" is a collection of noted utterances by a dozen leaders in our history. Each is presented in facsimile reproduction of the original, but in type large enough and clear enough to be easily read.

Benjamin Franklin is represented by the question-and-answer examination in the House of Commons, 1766, Thomas Paine by "The American Crisis," 1776, and Washington by his Farewell Address, 1796. From the many Jefferson papers that might have been chosen, the editor, John E. Pomfret, chose the 1801 inaugural address, and from those of James Monroe, the famous doctrine of 1823 that bears his name.

The others are: James Madison, war message of 1812; Lincoln, 1861 and 1865 inaugurals and the Gettysburg address of 1863; William Jennings Bryan, "Cross of Gold" speech, 1896; Theodore Roosevelt, addresses on foreign affairs, 1904, and Monroe Doctrine, 1905; Woodrow Wilson, presentation of the Treaty of Versailles for ratification, 1919; Herbert Hoover, principles and ideals of the United States Government, 1928, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, philosophy of government, 1932.

It is interesting to see from the facsimiles that the printing and format of the original documents, while plain, were not poor. Most of the originals are in the Huntington Library, San Marino, Calif., which has published this unusual volume.

THE fourth and fifth volumes listed bea the stamp of one of the country's best historical and biographical scholars, Dumas Malone of Columbia University, formerly editor of the monumental Dictionary of American Biography.

Dr. Malone, although hard at work on the definitive biography of Jefferson, two volumes of which have appeared, has taken time out to produce the text for a "life story" of the Declaration of Independence. The Milhollen and Kaplan team of collectors of pictures and prints from the Library of Congress is responsible for the assembly of 250 pictures relating to Jefferson's classic work. Many of these pictures have not before been reproduced.

In "The Jeffersonian Heritage" Dr. Malone gathers the radio and television broadcast series presented in co-operation with the National Association of Educational Broadcasters under a Ford Foundation grant through the Fund for Adult Education.

These episodes, which deal with such themes as "the danger of freedom," "the experiment of a free press" and "what the Jefferson heritage means today," were written by Morton Wishengrad, Milton Geiger, Joseph Mindel and George Probst, under Dr. Malone's guidance.

A FITTING close to a review of these books is the final paragraph from Woodrow Wilson's address to the Senate, July 10, 1919, in behalf of the League of Nations. For though he was doomed to fail in his immediate goal, he was to lay the foundation for international action for peace a generation later. Said President Woodrow Wilson:

"The stage is set, the destiny disclosed. It has come about by no plan of our conceiving, but by the hand of God who led us into this way. We cannot turn back. We can only go forward, with lifted eyes and freshened spirit, to follow the vision. It was of this that we dreamed at our birth. America in truth shall show the way. The light streams up on the path ahead, and nowhere else."

—HUMOR— Cream of the B. Cerf Crop Of Merriment

AN ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MODERN AMERICAN HUMOR, edited by Bennett Cerf. (Hanover House, Doubleday & Co., 688 pgs., $3.95.)

RICHARD ROSE

BENNETT CERF, America's foremost middleman of humor, has arranged another successful contact between topflight writers and hungry audiences. As this book is his first sampling from the rich vineyard of humorous stories and articles, it contains his pick of the crop.

It includes something for almost everyone, and more importantly most things are for most people. O. Henry and Frank Sullivan, Bret Harte and S. J. Perelman, are found under the same chapter headings beside less familiar names of highly skilled writers.

In assembling the book, Mr. Cerf enforced no confining criteria. He asked only that the writing be true to an undefined comic spirit, even if "decidedly on the grim side."

The chapter headings of the book are mere convenient place marks. More than half of the book contains stories catalogued under American regional headings. As New York City is the most heavily represented region, there is no overweighting towards bucolic humor. Parody, verse, radio and stage lines, stories of children and of travel add to the book's bulk.

The younger set is represented in telling fashion by Art Buchwald and John Crosby, among others. Their newspaper columns are well worth anthologizing, especially Buchwald's advice on wines. Sample: "There are two Austrian vintages—this year's and last year's."

THE old names are present, too, signed to relatively fresh, unanthologized material, A. J. Liebling, Wolcott Gibbs, James Thurber and Alva Johnston are among those from The New Yorker's stable put through their paces before the reader's eyes.

When Mr. Cerf reprints some of the writers in the school books, he chooses them because they are funny, not because they were funny. The reader is spared Frank Stockton while Mark Twain and Ring Lardner are saved for him.

In reading this anthology, this reviewer found that dialect stories seemed less funny to him than to Mr. Cerf. Dialects and dialect spelling are past their Golden Age. Today, translating the spelling into understandable English is sometimes not worth the effort.

A selection on humor in politics is omitted, even though Mr. Cerf notes in his preface, "Possibly we haven't been laughing quite enough in recent months—or at exactly the right things." Surely the subject matter for humor is not lacking. H. L. Mencken's polished portraits in brimstone offer historical background. The Congressional Record offers an overwhelming source for contemporary material.

Wisely, the introduction is reduced to a modest two pages and other editorial comment is absent. Mr. Cerf has read and selected with care. He feels it is best for the reader to read the funnymen themselves. With the selection he has made, he is right.

THE BATTLE CRY OF FREEDOM, by Samuel A. Johnson. (University of Kansas Press, 357 pgs., $5.)

BLEEDING KANSAS, by Alice Nichols. (Oxford University Press, 307 pgs., $4.50.)

JAMES LAWRENCE

ON May 30, 1854, President Franklin Pierce signed the Kansas - Nebraska Act, leaving the decision on slavery in Kansas to "squatter sovereignty." The state's history then began in bloodshed.

All this year Kansans have been celebrating their territorial centennial with pageants and re-enactments and, of course, books. Most of the observances have dealt with early Kansas, which was as unlike present Kansas as a bowie knife is to a silo. From this it appears that modern Jayhawkers feel that the Bloody Kansas period was the most interesting thing ever to happen to Kansas.

Certainly the New England Emigrant Aid Society represents a unique if special chapter in history, as set down in "The Battle Cry of Freedom" by Samuel A. Johnson, a Kansan now with the Harris Teachers College faculty.

The Emigrant Aid Society was established by New England Yankees to colonize Kansas with Free State settlers, to save it from slavery and to make money — though, as Dr. Johnson shows, its founders did not all agree on the order of importance of these objectives.

THERE was Eli Thayer, imaginative promoter; Charles Robinson, field agent and first state governor; above all, Amos A. Lawrence, wealthy industrialist who was too realistic to think the enterprise could be chiefly commercial, and too idealistic to think it should be.

With such men behind it, the Emigrant Aid Society made history. It arose at a time when much of the North had given up hope of rescuing Kansas from slavery, on the supposition that this institution would simply move westward from Missouri. But the aid society moved settlers and settled them, gave them mills and hotels and guns. In the end the society did not make money but did help to build a free state, and it, vanished when that job was done.

The conflicts of idealism and personal ambition do not escape the author of "Bleeding Kansas." Alice Nichols, also a Kansan, is now a New York magazine editor. She has accomplished what newspaper men would term a rewrite job on the history of the Sunflower State, omitting flowers.

HEROES on neither side, she finds, were quite on a plane with angels. Gov. Robinson did not mind making money out of the Free State crusade and later faced impeachment charges. Jim Lane, a brilliant demagogue and later a Senator, led his Redlegs on raids into Missouri just as profitable as those which the pro-slavery Bushwhackers conducted in Kansas.

Yet Lane and Robinson represented the two main motives of Kansas settlement, Robinson was a Down East abolitionist who used diplomacy as a weapon. Lane was a former Indiana Democrat qualified to speak for the Western immigrants, who did not care about abolition but wanted no slavery around them. Lane's "Black Law" would not have abolished slavery but the right of any Negroes to live in the state.

Out of these conflicts between slavery and freedom, idealism and self-seeking, the long rifle of the Southern settlers and the Sharp's rifle of the Yankees, Kansas did develop in its special way. The Republican party was entrenched. For many years Kansas was perhaps the one place, outside of the South, which remembered the Civil War with special bitterness.

TODAY, outside of the tiny town of Lecompton on the Kaw river, there is a historical marker stating that the site was — not the territorial capital, not the home of early government—but the Seat of the Slave Power. In Kansas nothing more need be said.

The prejudices left over from years of bloodshed also created a partisan viewpoint on Kansas history. It was not all black and white, or all jayhawking and bushwhacking, and after a hundred years it is time for Dr. Johnson, Miss Nichols and other authors to be making that plain.

A SKETCH FROM "LIVING ON THE LEVEL"

Royal Barry Wills has been described as the architect who "designs the kind of houses most Americans want." A user of traditional architecture, he also is in the forefront of those who are adapting houses to the new day—a day of mechanical servants, informal living and new methods generally. A lot of his ideas, in both sketches and floor plans, are packed into his new book, "Living on the Level: One Story Houses" (Houghton Mifflin Co., 120 pgs., $5). There is a check list of things to know about a house, either bought or built, that is worth the price of the book. Many a home owner owes a debt to Mr. Wills's first book, "Planning Your Home Wisely," published 10 years ago. Many more will be indebted to him for this one.

WIDE SWINGS, ROTATING STRENGTH FEATURE LIST

Stocks Advance to New 25-Year Highs in Week, Hesitate, Then Close Strong.

By RADER WINGET

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP) — Christmas this year was really merry in Wall Street for both customers and brokers. Profits were fat for stockholders as the market stood within the shadow of its historic 1929 peaks. Commissions were great for brokers who enjoyed their heaviest business since the stock market began its heroic rise from the depression in 1933.

This week the stock market advanced to new 25-year highs, hesitated after profit-taking, and then closed the week with a show of strength that again sent it to new peak levels.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks registered its eighth straight weekly gain with a rise of $1.00 at $153.40. At that point the average is the highest since Sept. 7, 1929, when it stood at $154.20. Only three times in history has the average gone higher than it was at the end of this week. The all-time peak was $157.70 on Sept. 3 of 1929.

(Dow-Jones average of 30 industrial stocks advancing three out of the four sessions in the week closed at 397.15, up 2.21 points after scoring a new record high. The preceding week's gain was 4.86 points. The 20 rails were up 2.29 points to 144.76, the highest since May 27, 1930. In the previous week rail index gained 6.60 points. The 15 utilities ended the week at 61.51 up .11 of a point.)

There were two things that stood out this week in the stock market—wide price swings and rotating strength.

Time after time, blue chip stocks—and some that were only pale blue—jumped ahead with unaccustomed vigor. Brokers said the sudden hikes in price resulted from intense demand meeting a scant supply. Most of these stocks however, held doggedly to their gains in later trading.

Rotating strength took in almost all major divisions of the market. Old favorites like steels and rails and metals and oils and aircrafts were in demand, and many others unused to the spotlight in recent days also went ahead. These included the airlines, movies, gold and mining shares, and a long list of individual issues.

Low-priced issues also came to the fore with vigor. Brokers and traders were not unmindful of the Wall Street belief that low-priced shares have a habit of coming to life in late stages of a boom. And the market certainly has been booming all year and especially since the election.

Tax selling hasn't been as great a factor this year as in many previous years, brokers report. There remains only one day for selling to register profits on your 1954 income tax bill. That's Monday.

On Tuesday, stocks sold for delivery in four days in the regular way will be delivered to the buyer in the new year and profits to the seller must be counted in 1955 for taxes. Of course, stocks can be sold for cash or for next day delivery to the end of the year and still register profits for 1954. Such sales usually involve a concession from regular way prices.

Sales can be made regular way to the end of the year for the purpose of registering losses for your 1954 tax bite.

The market closed last week at a 25-year high, and it kept right on going up Monday with trading heavy.

On Tuesday it slowed down both in pace and in gains. On Wednesday, traders had an opportunity for profit-taking.

That proved to be a short-term affair. The Thursday market started with a pre-holiday air and continued that way most of the day with prices steady. Then toward the close, railroads came to life and sent prices up all around to new peaks.

With all the strength displayed this week, Wall Street remembered one thing—in the past, the market almost always has been higher on New Year's Eve than on Christmas Eve.

Week's Review Of Business And Finance

BUYING SPREE

By WALTER BREEDE JR.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)

SHOPPERS demonstrated their confidence in the nation's economy this week with the biggest Christmas buying spree on record. People were in a free-spending mood. Department stores from New York to Seattle and Dallas to Chicago reported the heaviest Yule traffic they had ever known. Dun & Bradstreet said total retail sales for December would hit an all-time high: 17 billion dollars.

Santa's package of cheerful news also contained these items:

The Pennsylvania Railroad, reporting better-than-year-ago earnings for the first time in 1954, said it might call back at least some of the 8000 maintenance workers it laid off earlier this year.

Auto and steel production, curtailed for the holidays, were expected to come back fast.

Cold weather boosted demand for fuel oil. Petroleum inventories were in the best shape they've been this year.

New records were indicated for December retail sales of gasoline and food. Consumption of electric power was at an all-time peak. Stock averages inched to new highs since 1929.

Over-All Situation.

The over-all situation shaped up this way:

With the swollen inventories of the post-Korean era down to manageable proportions again, companies were in fighting trim for the intense competition expected next year. Many were ready to enter the fray with streamlined production techniques, beefed-up sales teams, and new products.

Awaiting them was a growing army of consumers with steady jobs and money in the bank.

There was no discounting the fierce competition that lay ahead. But the general air of confidence was in sharp contrast to the gloom that had prevailed a year earlier.

Production of steel showed a much smaller decline than in Christmas week of 1953. Mills were scheduled to operate at 73.6 per cent of capacity, against 81.8 per cent the week before. That's a dip of 8.2 percentage points. It represents a decline of 194,000 tons in steel output. But compared with what happened a year ago, the drop was pretty mild. In Christmas week last year, steel production slid 22 percentage points, or nearly half a million tons. And many months went by before the market recovered.

The situation today is vastly different. Fast and furious buying by the auto makers is expected to keep the steel industry busy at least through March.

With most of the nation's auto factories working a four-and-one-half-day week, output of new cars fell below the previous week's 1954 high of 150,000. Dealer inventories continued to build up. With so many styles and colors and different kinds of optional equipment to choose from, some dealers said they had just about every model in stock—except the one the customer wanted. Manufacturers said they would push out new cars at a record clip in the first quarter of 1955 to avoid any possibility of a shortage in the spring selling season.

C.O.L. Index Up.

The 1955 cars took on added economic significance this week. In addition to being credited with sparking a yearend business boom, they were blamed for a rise in the Government's cost of living index.

Prices of food, appliances, furniture and recreation backed down in November. But new car prices advanced on the Government's index, because most of the 1955 models came out in that month and dealers abandoned the fat discounts they had been allowing on 1954 models.

So if you bought a new car, your living costs as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics crept up one-tenth of one per cent (to 114.6 per cent of the 1947-49 average). If you didn't, they went down two-tenths of one per cent.

The November food price index was at its lowest point since January 1951, but there were indications that it might not stay there very long. The price of prime beef on the hoof touched its highest level in nearly two years on the Chicago livestock market.

The Government's cost-of-living report also provided this news: factory workers' take-home pay last month was at an all-time high of $60.45 a week—an increase of nearly $2 since November 1953.

The United States Chamber of Commerce said jobs may get scarcer next year despite a higher production pace, because there will be more people looking for work, and those who have jobs will be more efficient. It urged that the Government meet this challenge by encouraging risk capital to seek new investment outlets.

Business Briefs.

Briefly over the business scene:

Gas appliance manufacturers shipped 71,700 home furnaces in the first 11 months this year—a new record. . . . Congress Democrats hinted at an "intensive investigation" of alleged monopolies in business. . . . Eastman Kodak Co. abandoned its policy of requiring amateur photographers to send their Kodak color film to Eastman's own laboratories for processing. From now on they can have the films developed wherever they want. . . . The General Foods Fund, sponsored by General Foods Corp., announced gifts totaling $270,000 to colleges and medical schools under its aid-to-education program for 1954. . . . That kiss under the mistletoe may cost you more money this year. Mistletoe crops were damaged by drought, and prices are higher.

PURCHASING AGENTS SEE CONTINUED IMPROVEMENT

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)—Business will keep on getting better next year.

That's the overwhelming sentiment among purchasing executives polled this month by the National Association of Purchasing Agents.

"Looking ahead to 1955, purchasing executives are definitely optimistic," the association said today in announcing results of its December business survey. "Ninety per cent of those venturing an opinion anticipate continued improvement in general business. Six per cent see it holding at the present level, and only 4 per cent expect declining activity."

While the poll heavily favored prospects of continued improvement, most of the executives said they thought the rise in business activity would not be great, "but rather of the creeping type of the past five months."

"Over-all, the reports indicate that major adjustments and corrections have been made and industry is prepared with new products and stepped-up sales plans to compete in the highly competitive markets of the new year," A.N.P.A. said.

"The December survey shows a continuance of the steady improvement of the past five months.

"New orders are reported up and again have a slight margin over production increases. This is a reversal of the normal December statistics, when the push for holiday goods is over and inventory time approaches. Industry commodity prices are stabilizing and stronger. Inventories are leveling out on the low side. Employment is high."

NO ONE ON LONG SIDE OF WHEAT HAS LOST

CHICAGO, Dec. 25 (AP)—It ought to be a merry Christmas for all the faithful bulls who have held onto wheat futures. They have profits.

Wheat prices advanced briskly on the Board of Trade this week, closing at or just under the seasonal highs. This meant that practically no one now on the long side of wheat had any losses.

The upturn in wheat was not reflected in other pits. Feed grains, rye and soybeans did practically nothing all week, apparently being overcome by the usual pre-Christmas trading lethargy.

Wheat closed the week 4¾@7c higher, corn ¼c lower to 1c higher, oats ⅛@1¼c higher, rye unchanged to ¾c lower, soybeans 1½c lower to 2½c higher and lard unchanged to 15c a hundred pounds lower.

At the week's close the price of March wheat was 34¾c above the seasonal low, May was 28¾c above the low, July 13¾c and September 14¼c.

Both old crop and new crop wheat futures shared in the week's advance, although the new crop was a shade firmer.

Early in the week the Agriculture Department came out with its first estimate of 1955 winter wheat production. The crop was placed at 679,000,000 bushels. Last year 791,000,000 bushels were harvested. That estimate started wheat rolling higher.

Grain experts cautioned this first department estimate usually is on the conservative side. Historically, the crop turns out better than was foreseen in December, although there have been a few exceptions. The biggest boost was in 1952-53 when the final outturn was 270,000,000 bushels more than the December forecast.

The big bullish impulse toward the end of the week came from the soil conservation division of the Agriculture Department, which said the danger of spring and summer dust storms in the drouth area (which is the western half of the winter wheat belt) is now greater than ever before in history.

As the holiday weekend started, the weather bureau's five-day outlook could forsee little or no precipitation for the drouth area. Under such circumstances, the speculative bull in new crop wheat had little reason to sell, except to take profits.

In old crop wheat the dominating influence was the belief supplies of the bread grain in the free market will become quite "tight" before the new crop comes in, a result of the heavy impoundings under the Government loan.

The Foreign Operations Administration granted $2,000,000 to Greece to buy American bread grains. The Government allocated 5,550,000 bushels of wheat for Yugoslavia, bringing to 16,695,000 bushels the amount to be sent to that country to ease a food shortage.

There was very little doing in other cereals. Oats enjoyed some sporadic popularity on rumors feed grains, including oats, would be made available to Turkey and on shipments of cash oats from Chicago to Memphis.

Rye stabilized after last week's debacle but could make no rally. Corn and soybeans were held down by the possibility of larger marketings of the cash article after the turn of the year. Lard eased as loose lard closed the week at 11⅞ cents a pound, equal to the year's low.

BUSINESS GOOD IN NON-FERROUS METALS MARKETS

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)—Business was good in the non-ferrous metals markets this week.

Demand for copper remained large, with consumers seeking more of the metal than was available. However, producers noted some easing of pressure for copper compared with a month ago. Mine production is increasing, and larger supplies of the metal will be available in a few months.

Makers of copper products used 114,392 tons of new copper in products shipped from their plants in November. That was only 1840 tons less than in shipments in October, a longer month. New business booked in November totaled 116,328 tons, up 13,471 tons from the month before.

The domestic price held firm at 30 cents a pound but European buyers continued to pay prices well above United States quotations.

Lead consumers entered the market this week for January requirements, and some sellers reported heavy sales. There were predictions that January sales would run ahead of those of December. Reflecting the belief that the price won't rise above 15 cents a pound, most buyers were ordering on an average price basis.

Zinc producers reported a satisfactory demand from galvanizers and die-casters. The high rate of activity in the automobile industry was responsible for the good demand for the die-casting grade.

STEER, LAMB AND HOG PRICES ADVANCE IN WEEK

NATIONAL STOCKYARDS, Ill., Dec. 25—USDA weekly review of the livestock market:

Quality of steers and heifers was below that of the previous week and a decreased over-all supply found sale in week ended Thursday at uneven price advances, varying from 50c to as much as $1 above the previous Friday. A few small lots of high choice yearling and medium weight steers brought $27@27.50, with prime 973 and 1017-lb. steers $29. Bulk choice steers brought $23.50@25.50; good and low choice $19.50@23. Choice 975-lb. mixed yearlings claimed $25; good and choice mostly $19@23.50. Cows were mostly 50c higher, utility and commercial $9.50@12; utility and commercial bulls steady, mainly at $11@13. Vealers were mostly steady, although final sales appeared $1 or more higher with slaughter calves sharing the strength. A few prime vealers attained $30 on the close, highest since March of 1954, majority of good and choice vealers $21@27; commercial and low good $15@21.

The week's trade was extremely spotted and irregular, especially hogs over 220 lb. with often $1 difference in price of hogs of same weight. Preference very strong for hogs under 200 lb. with heavier hogs discounted 25c and more for each additional ten pounds, the over-all spread at present being $3 between the average for 200 lb. and that for 300 lb. hogs. A sizable showing of best light hogs appeared at $19.50, one lot $19.75. The holiday influence caused a severe break of 50c@$1 in prices on Thursday but prices still figured 50@75c net higher on hogs under 220 lb. and 25@50c higher on better weights; sows steady to 25c lower. Bulks for week, 160-210 lb. $18.75@19.50; 210-220 lb. $18.25@19; 220-240 lb. $17.50@18.75; 240-260 lb. $17@18.25; 270-300 lb. $16.25@17.25, sows 400 lb. down $15@16; heavier sows $13.25@15.25.

Lambs advanced $1@1.50 for the week, a deck of woolskins reaching $21 to equal the peak since mid-September. Most woolskins were choice to prime from $19@20.50 but sales included a sizable showing of mixed good and choice from $17.50@19; several loads and lots of clipped lambs $19.25@20; top $19.75 for choice No. 1 skins, and $20 for fall and summer shorn pelts. Slaughter ewes sold unchanged; bulk $4@5.

WHAT MAKES YOU THINK YOU CAN'T BUY A '55 MODEL CAR?

My name is Hayden Rollins. I have bought cars for hundreds of people over the past few years who didn't dream they could own a current model car without a big down payment or staggering monthly payments. You can own a '55 model car, with less than 100 miles, today with your car as down payment and $47.92 a month. I can also personally arrange your car purchase on a 3% down payment and your payments won't start for 45 days from date of purchase. Bank financing.

Plenty of Room For Building to Expand, Belief

CHICAGO—The nation's construction industry has plenty of room to go on expanding next year and afterward because today's record-breaking dollar volume of construction activity is still well below the proportions of a speculative boom, it was asserted here by Dr. George Cline Smith, economist for F. W. Dodge Corporation, addressing the Chicago Building Congress at the LaSalle Hotel.

Comparing today's situation with what he said was generally agreed to be a real construction boom in the 1920s, Dr. Smith pointed out that when increases in construction costs and growth of the nation are taken into account, today's volume of construction is proportionately well below the peaks reached in 1926 and 1927.

"In 1926 and again in 1927," Dr. Smith said, "new construction put in place totaled a little over 12 billion dollars. That was the highest peacetime peak ever reached until 1947, when the current upsurge passed it up.

"This year, 1954, total new construction will amount to 36 billion dollars or so, setting a new all-time record for dollars spent. So today, it would appear, we're building about three times as much as we did in 1927.

Dollars Are Rubber.

"Unfortunately, when we measure construction in dollars, we're using a rubber yardstick—because construction costs have nearly tripled since 1927.

"If we put our present rate of construction into 1927 dollars, we find it has shrunk to 14 billion, instead of 36 billion. That's still a little gain over the 1927 boom of 12 billion.

"But the country has grown since 1927. We have to adjust for population changes, and what do we find? New construction per capita in 1927 was just about twice as much as it is in 1954, after taking cost into account.

"We can gauge the size of present construction outlays in still another way. In the boom years 1927-29, construction expenditures accounted for more than 15 per cent of the total national output; for the last three so-called record-breaking years they have averaged less than 10 per cent. On this basis, we have only two thirds of a boom.

Rates Will Continue.

"Therefore, we can rule out any fears of a collapse in construction which might be produced by the overbuilding characteristic of a speculative boom. We haven't come anywhere close to that stage yet. In fact, we can conclude that there is room for considerable expansion."

Dr. Smith said that it can be known with certainty that rates of construction activity will continue at record dollar levels over the next several months, because record levels have been set by the Dodge totals of contract awards for future construction in the 37 states east of the Rockies.

He stated that the official annual Dodge forecast for 1955 construction will be announced "in a few days."

Office Building Is Progressing On Schedule

Donald L. Barnes, president of American Investment Co., recalled the ground breaking of the company's modern home office building in Clayton exactly six months ago. On June 25 the first ground was broken for one of the most unusual buildings in the Midwest at a ceremony in the 8300 block of Maryland avenue.

Yesterday, several of the officials of American Investment Co. were checking details at the site with Joseph Gander, president of Bank Building and Equipment Corp. of America, architects and contractors for the new building.

The three-story building, which will house the executive offices of American Investment Co. and cost an estimated $1,500,000 is scheduled for occupancy on June 15, 1955.

The building, which has attracted wide attention throughout the country because of its design, features inverted concrete trusses at the eastern and western ends of the building which are pierced by windows shaded with concrete louvres. Approximately 60 per cent of the exterior will be glass and the front of the building facing Maryland avenue will be principally glass.

The third floor of the building, which is set back, features a roof of modern butterfly design.

The new building which will contain 61,542 square feet of floor space occupies the entire block, facing Maryland avenue. The adjoining block to the west will provide parking space for 120 automobiles.

It is expected that approximately 170 employes of American Investment Co. will be housed in the completed structure and all but 9500 square feet of space in the building will be occupied by the company.

The entire building will be air conditioned and piped music will be used in all departments to overcome office noises and make working conditions more pleasant.

PARKING RATES

The rates charged by private enterprise parking facilities are in line with our present day price structure, according to the National Parking Association. Charges, the N.P.A. says, are based on land values, labor costs, and a fair return on investment.

AVAILABLE SPACE SURVEYS

Available space surveys have shown repeatedly that there is plenty of off-street parking space available, even at peak periods, in the downtown areas of most cities according to the National Parking Association. Occasional spot shortages do occur, N.P.A. says and these are being corrected, but the real problem is educating the public to proper use of existing facilities.

February Dates Set for Annual Bildors' Show

Most of the floor space for the Bildors Home Show, to be held Feb. 12-20 at the Arena, already has been sold, Ben Goldberg, chairman of the Home Show Committee, reported yesterday.

A total of 26,720 square feet of space has been made available for the nine-day show and 97 per cent of that amount is signed for. Only enough space for ten more booths remains.

The 1954 show, attracting 122,678 persons, smashed all attendance records at the Oakland avenue building for a single event. Indications are now, according to Goldberg, that next year's show will be bigger and improved.

For one thing, many of the nationally advertised home products, furnishings and materials which will be on display at the National Association of Home Bildors Convention in Chicago next month also will be shipped here for exhibition.

Floor Traffic Plan.

Last year's remarkable crowds caught the Home Bildors Association by surprise, but this time Goldberg and his associates have devised a floor traffic plan approved by Fire Marshal Walter Bergmann, of wide aisles to alleviate the congestion problem and enable everyone to see everything in the shortest possible time.

Booth space for the more than 200 exhibits will be arranged in both the lower portion of the Arena (ice level) and the lobby, with room to be set aside for many other features and attractions. One of the show's highlights will be a "Gallery of Fashions in Home," which will depict the year-by-year change in home furnishings and trends.

"The purpose of our show," Goldberg explained, "is to make everyone home-conscious to the point of wanting to know what is going on in this field; that covers appliances, materials, ideas and furnishings."

Interest in such things is continually increasing, according to Goldberg. For evidence, he points to last winter's show and the amazing crowds.

Members of Committee.

Other members of the Home Show Committee, the guiding force of the annual show, include J. M. Bogdanor, R. J. Vandagrift, W. S. Bascom, N. V. Bussmann, C. F. Vatterott Jr., C. T. Wilson, Milton Duenke, Bert Miserogghi, C. S. Upson, V. Welsch, Earl Kupferer and R. C. Higginbotham, the latter president of the Home Bildors Association of Greater St. Louis.

Laurence E. Neville is serving as executive secretary of the Home Show Committee and Mel Doernhoefer as show manager.

Ground-Breaking Ceremonies for 'Avenue of Homes'

SYMBOLIZING START OF SHOW—Miss Mary Ellen Marschel does the spade work during ceremonies held Wednesday to break ground for the 'Avenue of Homes,' which will be one of the leading features of the Bildors Arena Home Show, Feb. 12-20. Watching the procedure are Dale Notestine, Melvin H. Glick, Clarence T. Wilson and Ben Goldberg, chairman of the Home Show committee. The nine-day event here will be the only exposition in the country that has more than two homes built for a single show, according to Goldberg. The 'avenue' will include three modern-type homes with up-to-date furnishings, appliances and materials.

New Loan Office Just Opened in Jennings Area

The first loan company in the Jennings area, Merchants Loan Co. of Jennings, recently opened new offices in the James building, 8307 Jennings road at West Florissant. The firm is affiliated with Merchants Loan and Finance Co., Seventh and Pine streets.

Located on the second floor of the recently-built drug store and office building, the new offices feature light rose-beige and hunter green plaster walls, acoustical ceilings and fluorescent lighting. Floors are covered with patterned asphalt tile. To take advantage of the natural lighting, the south and east walls are composed primarily of stainless steel frame windows with gray marble sills.

A gray oak-finished counter is topped with marbelized formica. Four closing booths are also constructed of gray oak paneling topped by panes of opaque, ribbed glass. A marbelized formica top table with built-in book rack is an integral part of each booth. Space between the counter and the booths is attractively filled by a gray oak flower box. Chrome and leatherette chairs and steel desks complete the furnishings.

Church Building Sets New Highs

CHAMPAIGN, Ill.—Contract awards for construction of new churches and other religious buildings are setting new high records this year and the outlook is for even greater activity in the field next year, it was stated by Dr. George Cline Smith, economist for F. W. Dodge Corp., construction news and marketing specialists.

This was stated in a lecture to Midwestern architects attending a four-day short course at the School of Architecture of the University of Illinois.

"As in any high-level construction rate of activity," Dr. Smith said, "the question of overbuilding is sometimes raised. We are certainly not overbuilding our churches. Since church building follows demand, and speculation is not a factor, it is doubtful whether we could ever have an overbuilt church situation even in the most materialistic sense of the word."

New All-Time High.

Dr. Smith disclosed that construction contract awards for religious buildings and related construction in the Dodge reports for the first nine months of 1954 set a new all-time high in that category for any first nine months in Dodge's 63-year history. The figures are for the 37 eastern states covered by Dodge's construction news service.

He said also that in breaking last year's all-time nine-month high record by a 25 per cent margin, the religious category was well ahead of the 13 per cent increase shown in the general totals of the Dodge construction contract figures.

He predicted that the nine-month total of $362,000,000 was so great as to virtually assure that the 1954 total will set a new high yearly record, above the $384,000,000 total for 1953.

More Important Share.

"Ever since the end of World War II, with the exception of a minor dip in the Korean war, religious buildings have tended to occupy a more important place in the construction picture," Dr. Smith said. "In 1946, the first full postwar year, such construction amounted to only 2.5 per cent of all non-residential building contract awards.

"So far in 1954 religious buildings have equaled 7 per cent of total non-residential awards, thus accounting for a much more important share of the total."

Dr. Smith cited the Dodge figures on religious construction contract awards as being in line with the independent findings of the Government Census Bureau to the effect that "the United States is becoming more church-minded, and the church membership since 1916 has grown considerably faster than the population of the nation. While the data are spotty, this growth has apparently been fairly steady through depression, war and postwar years."

KINGSWAY HOTEL MODERNIZATION IN FINAL STAGES

Final steps in the half-million dollar modernization program of the Kingsway Hotel are now in progress. The cornice which decorated the roof of the building is being removed, and will be replaced with a new three-foot decorative brick coping. The exterior walls consisting of seven floors will be refinished in an antique white with all trim in a Florida mint green.

New driveways and sidewalks are being installed and the main entrance, which is located on West Pine street, will be flanked with a new terrace for guests' convenience as an outdoor patio. Tailored shrubbery will border the perimeter of the building to accentuate the simple yet dignified modern lines of the structure.

The new Empire room facade facing Kingshighway will become one of the focal points in the new plans. The exterior semicircle will be graced by a floral and shrubbery arrangement with bas relief plaques designed by the House of Duke, Arts, flanking both exterior ends of the new ballroom.

According to B. H. Tureen future plans for the Kingsway Hotel consist of three new floors on top of the present structure, which will add 150 rooms plus a Sky Line room.

Jefferson Ave. Warehouse Sold To an Industry

A warehouse building at 1100 South Jefferson was recently purchased by Henges Co., Inc., it has been announced by J. Gordon Henges Jr., vice president of the organization.

The property which fronts 147 feet on Jefferson and 220 feet on LaSalle street, contains 32,100 square feet. It is of masonry and steel construction, heated, insulated and sprinklered, using steel trusses and one row of steel columns to give two 72-foot wide clear spans running the length of the building. A separate area for maintenance and repair of the truck fleet is included.

The building will be used for warehousing accoustical materials, tile flooring, movable steel partitions, folding doors, kitchen cabinets, cooking equipment, insulation, combination radio and music and high fidelity sound systems, and for the manufacture of formica plastic sink and counter tops.

Operations began at the new address on Dec. 13, representing the consolidation of three buildings under one roof at the third expansion for the company since 1946. Officers of the company are J. Gordon Henges, president; Edward C. Melsheimer, vice president; J. Gordon Henges Jr., vice president; Richard J. Henges, vice president and V. M. Henges, secretary-treasurer.

Title was taken from the Griesedieck Bros. Brewing Co. by Mr. and Mrs. J. Gordon Henges, and an investment of $125,000 was indicated.

ELECTED VICE-PRESIDENT

Samuel J. Mitchell was elected executive vice president of Investment Insurors, Inc., 25 South Bemiston avenue, Clayton, Mo., at the annual directors' meeting of the firm Dec. 6, it has been announced by Alfon W. Larson, president and chairman of the board.

Two More Floors To Be Added to Service Building

Two more floors will be added to the Union Electric service building at 721 South Eighteenth street, it was announced this week. The project will cost an estimated $1,750,000.

Design work is already under way and actual construction is expected to start early next spring. The project will make available an additional 80,000 square feet of floor space at the company's service headquarters. When the two new floors are completed, the service building will provide a total of 226,000 square feet of space, compared to 213,000 square feet at the company's general office building at 315 North Twelfth street.

Union Electric Engineers.

Design of the building is being handled by Union Electric engineers with architectural services by Rathmann, Koelle and Carroll, architects on the original project.

The first two floors of the service building were completed in May 1952. Plans were made for the addition of two more floors in the original design. Foundations were built to support additional floors and provisions were made for the installation of air conditioning, lighting and other service facilities for future expansion. Provision was also made for the eventual installation of passenger elevators to service future floors.

Practical Basic Plan.

The basic plan for the service building incorporated a structure economical to erect, inexpensive to maintain and highly flexible as to interior alteration. Built of concrete, flat-slab construction with brick exterior, the building was designed for use over a period of 50 years.

The Eighteenth and Gratiot street area was chosen originally as a site for the building because of its strategic location in relation to the heavy downtown load, the greatest concentration of overhead construction and the company's power plants. It also is close enough to the Twelfth street general office building for efficient centralization of many activities.

APPAREL SHOP TO OPEN IN NORTHLAND CENTER

Plans to open a 5000 square foot store in the Northland Shopping Center have been announced by the Libson Shops. Architecture and store layout will follow the pattern used at the shop's downtown store, which was opened in 1953.

The Northland store will be the largest of the 18 St. Louis shops operated by Libson, of which Harry E. Lieberman is founder and president.

The building is now under construction, with occupancy scheduled for next August.

CEYLON PREMIER TELLS ASIA HOW TO FIGHT REDS

Calls for Consolidation of Resources to Improve Economic Conditions.

MANILA, Sunday, Dec. 26 (AP)—Ceylon's traveling Prime Minister Sir John Kotelawala issued a warning here about Communism in Asia and how to fight it.

"Our countries must pool their resources," he told a Town Hall meeting here last night. "Asia must consolidate for progress, and in doing so, it will consolidate against Communism."

Arriving here last night on the last lap of a world tour, Kotelawala warned: "If you have 600,000,000 people believing in an idea— in Communism —they could easily march to Kingdom come and the West would not last 10 minutes."

Red China, he said, has "developed so rapidly that many Asian countries are impressed and may look to it for guidance."

"To combat this, you have to educate the masses, to show them the benefits of democracies. The common man in Asia does not know the difference—Communism, democracy or what else. All he cares is that his stomach is filled. You have to teach him the benefits of democracy.

"Raise the living standard of the Asian masses and you will have won the battle against internal Communism. Improve Asia's economy through self-help and development — not hand outs."

Economic force, not military would be the greatest single element the democracies could use against the Communists in Asia, he said.

"We believe the first necessity for Asia is not an organization to resist possible invasion, but one to improve present economic conditions," he continued.

For this reason, he explained, Ceylon did not join the Southeast Asia Defense Treaty Organization although he said his country continues to maintain an "open mind" regarding it. The pact was signed in Manila last September by eight nations, including the Philippines and the United States.

"We will join when the time comes. So far the occasion has not arisen. But SEATO or no SEATO, we shall fight whenever we are attacked," he declared.

"I feel very optimistic," he said of his world tour. Every leader I met is out for peace. They know atomic weapons may finish the whole world."

Kotelawala went sightseeing to Baguio today and will return to Manila tonight to attend a dinner given by Vice President and Foreign Secretary Carlos P. Garcia. He will leave by plane early tomorrow for Singapore en route to the Colombo powers conference at Bogor, Indonesia.

FIRE DAMAGES HOTEL, SCENE OF CARRY NATION DEFEAT

BANGOR, Me., Dec. 25 (AP)—The 120-year-old Bangor House, a hotel where Carry Nation once threatened to swing her saloon-wrecking hatchet, was badly damaged early today by fire. Loss was estimated at $100,000.

The blaze sounded its own alarm when it crossed telephone wires, alerting the night telephone operator, Herbert Rossignol. Rossignol awakened some of the 71 guests and police and firemen broke indoors to rescue others. No injuries were reported.

Carry Nation, who embarked on her saloon-wrecking career with a hatchet at the turn of the century, did not do any damage when she came here. She went into the hotel dining room and when she did not find a saloon, clung to a post until a lumberjack pressed the lighted end of a cigar to her arm. Then she fled.

SPORTS FEATURED AT FT. LAUDERDALE

Major swimming and boating competitions will be offered for the entertainment of Fort Lauderdale's winter vacation colony from late December through January.

The sports program will be opened with features of the sixteenth annual Aquatic Forum, including a water pageant to be held Dec. 30. The forum annually attracts 700 male swimmers for 10 days of outdoor training in advance of the opening of the collegiate swimming season in January.

Power boat racing will be in the spotlight on Jan. 9, when leading hydro racers will compete in a three-hour program at Bahia-Mar yacht basin.

Local and visiting boatmen will match speed and skill in the Bahamas sail race Jan. 21. The starting line will be from a spectator vantage point off the public beach.

Swimming again takes over Jan. 28-30, when 100 of the nation's foremost girl swimmers will participate in the Pan-American trials for the right to represent the United States in pre-Olympic games starting March 12 in Mexico City.

NEW DEVELOPMENT IN BUS TRAVEL BEING EXTENDED

"Slumber-stop" service, a new development in bus travel, is being extended to four more routes between eastern cities and the West coast, it has been announced by the Greyhound Lines.

The service was orignally introduced by the bus line last spring on schedules between Chicago and San Francisco, and St. Louis and San Francisco. Now "slumber-stop" services have been added between Chicago and Seattle via the Twin Cities; Chicago and Seattle via Salt Lake City and Portland; Chicago to Los Angeles via Salt Lake City and Las Vegas; and Chicago and Los Angeles via St. Louis and Amarillo.

The pre-planned "slumber-stop" service provides scenic travel in air-conditioned busses by day and accommodations at good hotels each night. The purchase of the "slumber-stop" ticket automatically reserves single or double rooms, as desired.

One of the most important features of the new service is that a passenger does not have to make hotel reservations in advance. He can start his "slumber-stop" trip immediately after buying his ticket, assured that hotel rooms will be ready for him.

ACCOMMODATIONS IN GERMANY

Tourist accommodations in Germany have been steadily increasing during the past year, and great numbers of travelers can now be comfortably taken care of even in the height of the tourist season.

For example, in Bavaria there were 206,000 beds available for travelers on April 1, 1954, an increase of 11 per cent over the previous year; the figure has now reached 88 per cent of prewar capacity and is still growing.

QUEBEC WINTER CARNIVAL TO RUN FOR SIX WEEKS

QUEBEC, Que.—This ancient Canadian city is busy laying plans for the renewal of one of its most cherished traditions—a winter carnival featuring an international dog derby, parades, dancing and various types of winter contests.

The carnival will run for six weeks, opening officially on Jan. 6, or "Little Christmas," culminating in a grand Mardi Gras show. French is the language spoken by 90 per cent of the inhabitants in the capital of old New France.

Symbol of the carnival spirit will be the figures of a snowman — the "Bonhomme Carnaval" who will preside over all major events.

Purpose of the carnival is to renew one of the old city's famed traditions. Festivities are not restricted to daylight hours, two night festivals, with fireworks, will take place at Lac Beauport and at the gates of the city.

The carnival is expected to renew the color and gaiety that has made this city famous for its winter season.

The tour also will include a stop at one of the city's major cigar factories.

TOURIST PROGRAM IN CORPUS CHRISTI

The most extensive tourist entertainment program in the history of Corpus Christi, Texas, has been announced by the Director of Parks and Recreation.

A tourist center, located in the American Legion building on Shoreline drive, will have its own ballroom, shuffleboard courts, rooms for crafts classes, a motion picture studio and special offices for the director and his assistant, who will help entertain Corpus Christi visitors and assist them with any problems.

Regular tourist tours are planned each Wednesday afternoon to such points of interest as the King Ranch, Padre and Mustang Islands, the Aransas Wild Life Refuge, the cattle auctions in Alice and Robstown, the shrimp fleet in Aransas Pass, the marine laboratory and "Fish Bowl" in Rockport, the deep sea fishing fleet in Port Aransas and the Wild Life Refuge on Lydia Ann Island.

Additional tours will be made through leading industries in the coastal bend areas as well as through the Port of Corpus Christi and ocean-going vessels tied up at Corpus Christi docks. Card, domino and shuffleboard tournaments will be held throughout the winter and fishing tournaments limited to members of the Tourist Club will extend throughout the season. Craft classes in leather work, ceramics, shellwork, art and other handicrafts will be held weekly.

All winter visitors are invited to register in the state books, as special state nights and pot-luck suppers will be a regular part of the entertainment program.

U.S. PROJECT SEEKS CONTROL OVER LIGHTNING

Forest Fire Prevention Program Intends to Break Up the Clouds That Carry Bolts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 25 (UP) — "Project Sky Fire," a plan to battle lightning in the sky instead of on the ground, is probably the most ambitious forest fire prevention program ever undertaken.

"Sky Fire" aims at nothing less than breaking up the fat, rolling cumulus clouds which carry lightning over the big western forests.

The United States Forest Service hopes that soon, thanks to "Sky Fire," they will be able to destroy lightning clouds with dry ice "bombs" or shoot them to pieces with "flak" from silver iodide generators on the ground.

A co-operative research project, "Sky Fire" is only two years old. But according to Jack Barrows, director of the project, much new and valuable weather information has been discovered already.

Barrows, whose headquarters is the Intermountain forest and range experiment station at Missoula, Mont., described "Sky Fire" to a recent forestry convention here.

Greatest Single Cause.

"In the western United States," Barrows said, "lightning is the greatest single cause of forest fires. During the last 25 years over 145,000 lightning fires have occurred in the 12 western states."

To combat this menace, the Forest Service and a private group, the Munitalp Foundation of New York, set up "Sky Fire" in 1952.

A cloud-seeding expert, Dr. Vincent J. Schaefer, research director of Munitalp, is working with foresters to determine how best to attack the lightning-carrying clouds. The theory is that dry ice of silver iodide dropped into a cloud will cause moisture particles to become heavy enough to fall in rain drops, thus breaking clouds up.

"Before we can start actual cloud seeding experiments," Barrows explained, "we want to locate where clouds are born, where they're likely to go and the kind of weather they bring with them.

"Our lookouts cover about 28,000,000 acres of forest land. Each day they make five reports and map the clouds as they grow and move."

'Jet Stream' Studied.

From this information, Barrows said, "we make an analysis of what storms are on the way and where they are going."

The project also is investigating the "jet stream's" effect on lightning storms. The jet stream is "like a mammoth river of air flowing between 20,000 and 40,000 feet," Barrows explained. Sometimes the stream retards lightning storms but other times it aids them.

"Sky Fire" observers have located several breeding places of cumulus clouds, "the cradles of lightning storms," including the Wallowa mountains of northeastern Oregon, the Priest Rapids country in northern Idaho and the Flathead National Park in western Montana.

Barrows said it would be two more years before "Sky Fire" did any actual cloud seeding.

He said seeding might cause abnormal rainfall or abnormal dry spells and "we're not going to do any seeding until we know exactly what's going to happen."

Y.M.C.A. BRANCHES PLAN HOLIDAY PROGRAMS, PARTIES

More than 500 guests are expected at the Y.M.C.A.'s annual worthy boys party at the branch "Y" at 2846 Pine street tomorrow. The program will include a movie at the Strand Theater, 2000 Market street, dinner at 12:15 p.m. and entertainment.

In other holiday programs, an annual boys olympics will be held Tuesday and Wednesday by the physical department of the Pine street branch, with awards going to winners of swimming and gymnastic events. Joe Causino, executive secretary of the South Side branch and director for the last 20 years of the "Y's" South Side Brotherhood, will play his annual role as Santa Claus. The "Y" brotherhood clubs are staging 18 parties as their program.

The staff of the County branch "Y" donated money ordinarily used for employe gift exchange to CARE for food packages for needy Europeans. The staff and the Hanley Junior Hi Y Club purchased 896 pounds of food through CARE.

50TH ANNIVERSARY DINNER

Mr. and Mrs. Peter H. Hoener, 1344 Lanvale drive, Webster Groves, will celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary today with an open house for friends and relatives at Lutheran Church of Webster Gardens, 8651 Watson road, Webster Groves, from 4 to 9 p.m.

Hoener, 74 years old, retired about nine years ago after working 40 years as a cabinet maker. His wife is 72. The pair has three children and eight grandchildren.

Fox Causes Fatal Crash.

CHENOA, Ill., Dec. 25 (AP)—A Chicago man swerved his automobile to miss a fox today and the car went into a ditch near Chenoa, killing Mamie Robinson, 70 years old, of Chicago, and injuring three persons. The driver, Sylvester Wilson, suffered a neck injury. His son, Warren, 6, suffered minor head injuries and Miss Abertine McCary of Chicago, suffered cuts and bruises.

School Head Says Neighbors' Roosters Are Ruining His School

He Tells Court That Pupils Are Tired, Nervous From Lack of Sleep Because of Crowing.

AARHUS, Denmark, Dec. 25 (AP)—Harold Foged, superintendent of the Beder Boarding School, says neighboring roosters are threatening to drive away his 50 pupils.

Foged tried to get a court to force the poultry farm out of earshot. He played a recording and the judges agreed the noise is a nuisance, but, since the school is in a rural area, they see no reason for considering the presence of chickens a law violation.

It took Foged and his wife seven years to build up their school. They estimate it is worth more than $100,000. Everything was all right until two spinsters bought the neighboring lot and set up a poultry farm.

"You don't realize how annoying 25 roosters trying to impress 300 hens can get until you have stayed here a few days," Foged said. "The noise is so nerve-wracking our students have become tired and nervous due to lack of sleep."

Foged plans to call on the Supreme Court for help. He says he would be satisfied if his neighbors would compensate him for the $4000 it would cost to sound-proof his school—or if they will keep their hens without roosters.

WOMAN HELD IN 5 POISONINGS CLEARED IN 2 OTHER DEATHS

ANNISTON, Ala., Dec. 24 (UP)—Mrs. Nannie Doss, the grandmother accused of poisoning four husbands, and her own mother, today was cleared of two other suspected poisonings.

Reports from an autopsy revealed that neither Mrs. Doss's grandson, 2-months-old Robert Lee Higgins, nor her sister, Mrs. Dovie Williams, died from poison.

The autopsies were performed after Mrs. Doss was charged with murdering husband No. 2, Frank Harrelson of nearby Jacksonville, Ala.; husband No. 3, Arlie Lanning of Lexington, N.C.; husband No. 4, Richard L. Morton of Emporia, Kan.; husband No. 5, Samuel Doss of Tulsa, Okla., and her mother, Mrs. Louisia H. Hazel of Jacksonville, who died when visiting her daughter in Lexington.

Mrs. Doss was committed to the Oklahoma State Hospital at Vinita, Okla., for observation earlier this month.

PILOTS ATTACK PLAN FOR 10-HOUR FLIGHTS

Union Says U.S. Proposal for Irregular Airlines Would Impair Safety.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP)—The AFL Air Line Pilots Association yesterday attacked a proposed Government regulation that would let irregular airlines operate two-pilot flights for 10 hours, instead of only eight hours as at present.

The association, in a letter to the Civil Aeronautics Board, said the new rule would impair air safety to benefit the "economic desires" of a particular airline. It urged the CAB to turn down the new rule.

The CAB announced Dec. 3 that it was considering extension to irregular airlines of its temporary rule permitting regular airlines to fly up to 10 hours with two pilots and a flight engineer, instead of the existing eight-hour limit with such crews.

It invited all interested persons to file comments by Dec. 22. The agency will consider the views of the pilots and others and decide whether to issue the new rule.

Issuance of the 10-hour limit for regularly scheduled airlines last summer led to a 25-day strike by the Pilots Association against American Airlines, first to put it into effect. The pilots went back to work under the longer-hours system pending a finding by David L. Cole, named as a neutral arbitrator. He still has the case under advisement.

The 10-hour rule for both regular and irregular airlines would continue until permanent new hour-limit rules are written by the CAB.

The proposed extension of the rule to irregular airlines—those which do not fly regularly scheduled flights—came at the request of North American Airlines. North American has applied for the right to make nonstop trans-continental flights with 102 passenger in DC-6B giant passenger planes.

In a possible hint of new labor trouble if the new order is issued, the Pilots Association said the CAB's "unfortunate action" in removing the eight-hour limit for scheduled airlines "has resulted in serious and grave labor difficulties which still remain unsolved."

The association's chief point was that the airlines can still make flights of more than eight hours if they want to under present rules. But they would have to hire an extra pilot for such flights. Therefore, the association charged, the CAB is only seeking to give an economic benefit to North American Airlines at the cost of the pilots and air safety.

The association said that in a series of recent foreign air accidents, pilots in almost every case "had been flying for excessive periods at the time that the accident occurred."

CIO REPORTS DECREASE OF $200,722 IN NET WORTH

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP)—The CIO, in a financial statement today, reported a $200,722 drop in its net worth for the year ended Sept. 30, due largely to greater organizational costs, expanded educational programs, and greater activity "in the legislative field."

It said it collected $45,000 more in per capita taxes from its national unions and organizing committees than in the preceding year. It collects 10 cents a month per member, a total of $5,271,503 for the last year.

About $200,000 more was received in dues and initiation fees from local industrial unions. Total CIO income was $5,640,885. The CIO's net worth was listed as $2,228,495.

MILLIONAIRE HAROLD CLARK IS FOUND DEAD IN GULF

MARATHON, Fla., Dec. 25 (UP)—The body of Harold Ames Clark, millionaire Florida Keys developer, was found floating in the Gulf of Mexico Friday near his home here.

Coroner R. D. Zetterower said Clark's body bore no outward indication of foul play.

Mrs. Clark said she and her husband had entertained friends at their home Thursday evening and afterward he left the house. She said she went to bed presuming he had gone to visit other friends as he often did.

Clark, a hotel owner and one of the main developers in the recent Keys real estate boom, was one of the original directors of Gulfstream Park race track near Miami, and formerly owned a racing stable. He sold his racing interests in 1945. He was 59 years old.

Queen's Message Praises Britons For 'Toil and Devotion to Duty'

Crowd Calls 'Happy Christmas' as She and Children Walk Home After Church Services.

LONDON, Dec. 25 (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II led the British nation today in the religious observance of Christmas. Churches everywhere were crowded, and the Queen worshiped in one of the smallest of them, St. Mary Magdalene in the parish of Sandringham, seat of her country home.

The Queen was there twice, once with her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, for a private celebration of holy communion, and then with the Duke and their children, Prince Charles and Princess Anne, for the community's Christmas morning service.

It rained early, and the royal family went to the service in cars. Then the weather improved and the Queen dismissed the cars. She walked down a path to Sandringham House, the children skipping along happily and a crowd of several hundred applauding and calling "happy Christmas."

In her annual Christmas broadcast to the British commonwealth, the young Queen expressed her appreciation for "the faithful toil and devotion to duty" of her peoples. She paid tribute to the millions "whose names will never be household words," saying they were the real makers of heroes and progress.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, primate of the Anglican church, preached a sermon urging men to exercise patience in dealing with the vexations of the world. At a service in Canterbury cathedral, the archbishop said:

"We constantly forget the astonishing patience of God in his dealing with rebellious man, the enduring patience of Christ as He faced and faces all the contradictions and cruelties of daily life. He was always teaching His disciples to be patient.

"It was then and has been ever since an unpopular lesson, and never more so than today when we see on all sides impatience of nationalism and of racial and sectional claims."

At St. Paul's Cathedral, the dean, the Very Rev. Dr. W. R. Matthews, expressed regret that at a time when the human mind has reached outstanding achievements there is more fear than ever.

"Now it is seriously being discussed as a real possibility that the human race may eliminate itself, that by the inventions of this majestic human mind it may commit a kind of involuntary universal suicide," he said.

"One might say that at the very moment when the grandeur of man is most plainly manifested his misery is most plainly made distinct. We have powers undreamed of in the past, but we do not use them so that they are not a danger, but a benefit."

The Roman Catholic faithful thronged Westminster Cathedral where Cardinal Bernard Griffin celebrated mass.

CHRISTMAS CANDLE STARTS FIRE, TWO CHILDREN PERISH

COVINGTON, Va., Dec. 25 (AP)—A Christmas candle in a window set off a blaze that burned two children to death and critically burned another here last night while their mother was out caroling.

The flames destroyed the frame home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Jones and took the lives of their daughters, Shirley Ann, 3 years old, and Wanda Lee, 16 months. Ella Mae Jones, 5, was sent to a hospital in a critical condition.

Firemen said the candle set fire to window curtains and the blaze spread so quickly the entire building was afire by the time they arrived.

The father, at home when the fire broke out, escaped without injury.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 25 (AP) —The Christmas tree that Mr. and Mrs. Earl Davis kept lighted almost continuously for nearly three weeks brought death to them on Christmas eve.

Davis, 42 years old, and his wife, Mrs. Helen F. Davis, 41, died in separate rooms as a flash fire swept their frame house.

Neighbors reported the Christmas tree burst into flames, starting the fire. Fire Chief C. C. Styron said the cause would be listed as overheated Christmas tree lights.

EDWARD J. LEBEAU DIES; NAVY CONTRACTS EMFLOYE

Edward J. Lebeau, industrial contracts liaison man for the local Navy procurement office, died yesterday of a heart ailment at his home, 5774 De Giverville avenue.

He was one of four business analysts appointed in 1951 by OPS to aid St. Louis business men on price control problems. Before entry into government service he was a refrigeration equipment salesman.

Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Mary Loftus Lebeau; two sons, Frank J. and Edward J. Lebeau Jr., and a sister, Miss Virginia M. Lebeau. Funeral services will be at 9 a.m. Tuesday at St. Roch's Catholic Church, Rosedale avenue and Waterman boulevard, with burial in Calvary Cemetery.

PUSHES CHILD TO SAFETY LOSES OWN LIFE IN ACCIDENT

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 25 (AP) —A 70-year-old man pushed his three-year-old grand-daughter to safety but lost his own life today when he was struck by an automobile while out for a stroll before Christmas dinner.

Police said Martin Neary was leading little Kathleen Neary across a street when the accident occurred. Kathleen was treated at a hospital for bruises and shock.

The driver of the automobile was not held.

NATIONALISTS RAID COMMUNIST ISLAND IN TACHEN AREA

TAIPEH, Dec. 25 (AP) — The Chinese Nationalists ushered in Christmas day with a combined air and naval raid against a small Communist-held island in the Tachen area 200 miles north of Formosa.

The Defense ministry said planes and warships began pasting Chiku island, 16 miles southwest of the Tachens at midnight.

All planes and ships returned to their bases after the hour-long raid, the ministry said.

Chiku, less than a square mile, lies off the coast of Chekiang province. It is used as a Communist lookout post.

Taipeh's midnight to 5 a.m. curfew was canceled today until further notice. Imposed two days ago to safeguard the population against thieves and other criminals, it had caused much dissatisfaction.

THAILAND TO BACK WEST, SKIP INDONESIA MEETING

BANGKOK, Dec. 25 (AP) — Thailand has committed itself to the free democratic camp and definitely will not attend the proposed African-Asian conference in Indonesia next March, Acting Foreign Minister Col. Vorakarn Bancha said today.

In an interview published by the American-edited Bangkok Post, the minister said the parley has been proposed by neutral nations with neutral objectives, while Thailand believes it to its interest to remain allied with Western democracies.

Vorakarn made the statement on the eve of a busy weekend which will see Foreign Minister Prince Wan Waithayakon returning here from New York and two prime ministers—India's Nehru and Burma's U Nu—being received as Thai Government guests. The visiting ministers were expected to spend Sunday night here en route to the Colombo powers conference in Bogor, Indonesia.

OIL HEIRESS DIES IN FIRE

TULSA, Okla., Dec. 25 (AP)— Mrs. Marie Foster Kane Smith, 44 years old, Tulsa and Bartlesville oil heiress, perished today in a fire in her apartment here. A cigarette apparently started the blaze.

Her father, the late H. V. Foster, was president of the I.T.I.O. Oil Co., which brought in the fabulously wealthy south Oklahoma City field in 1928.

Cardinals Schedule 56 Night Home Games for '55

Of Players, Contracts, Coaches, Rules, Etc., Etc.

BALL players naturally were shocked when Ralph Kiner asked to be cut more than the 25 per cent limit in his new contract with the Cleveland Indians. However, it was a surprise that Commissioner Ford Frick was shocked before the athletes registered pain. It was some kind of a reversal of the usual procedure when the players supported a stand the Commissioner had taken.

Actually, the contract that major league players sign when they agree to slave in sunshine and under the floodlights for the hard-hearted magnates, seems to support the right of Kiner and the Cleveland club to agree to the terms that caused Frick to act.

On page three of the contract, under section 10, the agreement between player and club provides that: "On or before Jan. 15 of the year next following the last playing season covered by this contract, the club may tender to the player a contract for the term of that year by mailing the same to the player. . . . If prior to March 1 next succeeding said Jan. 15, the player and the club have not agreed upon the terms of such contract, then on or before 10 days after said March 1, the club shall have the right by written notice to the player to renew this contract for the period of one year on the same terms, except that the amount payable to the player shall be such as the club shall fix in said notice; provided, however, that said amount, if fixed by a major league club, shall be an amount payable at a rate not less than 75 per cent of the rate stipulated for the preceding year."

In the case of Kiner the figure was suggested by Kiner and was not fixed by the major league club, which would seem to eliminate the 75 per cent minimum provision.

March 1 Is Too Early And Sometimes Too Late.

BALL players have considerable dificulty making up their minds about just what they want as a starting date for spring training. Along about April 1 each year they complain that spring training lasts too long. . . . They demand that March 1 be set as the earliest possible starting time. . . . Then when the slush is in the streets and cold winds make the boys think about how nice and warm it is in Florida, they decide it wouldn't be bad to take off for the sunny South about Feb. 15. This year Ford Frick decided that as long as the players had asked for it, they'd have to take it—that March 1 limit on reporting.

Dixie Walker's return as a Cardinal coach should help the ball club, especially the young hitters. . . . Dixie is one of the best batting coaches we've ever seen at work. . . . He became a better hitter in his later years as a big leaguer, not by accident, but by studying the business of hitting and practicing. . . . He points out to young players eager to hit the ball over the fence that most of the balls hit with that design end up as outfield flies.

"You can hit four terrific long flies and go four for zero," Dixie told the young hitters at St. Pete when he was last on Eddie Stanky's spring coaching staff. "But if you hit four line drives on those times at bat it's likely that several of them will go between outfielders."

Dixie then would demonstrate a level swing, just stroking the ball, frequently to what the trade calls the opposite field. He was a good teacher. Players who had been pull hitters exclusively, found great delight in punching the ball to the other field, under Dixie's instruction.

Sportsfolio.

COACHES would do better work if managers gave them more authority. . . . Under too many managers coaches are afraid to express an opinion. . . . A few years ago, during spring training, we greeted a Cardinal coach one morning at Al Lang Field. "It's a fine morning for work, isn't it?" was our rather inane remark and the coach, looking furtively around to see if the manager was listening, said, "You'd better ask the Skipper about that." . . . Jim Gallagher of the Chicago Cubs and the baseball rules committee, informs us that the scoring rules have been changed so a player striking out can't get credit for driving in a run. . . . If a runner scores from third while a catcher, after dropping a third strike, is throwing out the batter at first, the catcher will be charged with an error. A play like that in a Cardinal game, with the official scorer unable to find anything in the rules covering the situation, caused the committee action.

Open Here Day-Time, April 14

The Cardinals have scheduled a record 56 night games for their 1955 home baseball season, General Manager Dick Meyer announced last night.

Previous high of floodlight contests carded here was 55 in 1952, a year in which the Redbirds actually played 53 because of weather intervention.

Despite the heavy night-game activity, however, the Cardinals will open at home in the afternoon at Busch Stadium for the second straight season, playing the National League opener here against Milwaukee's Braves, Thursday, April 14 at 1:30. The Redbirds start on the road, playing at Chicago April 12.

Of only 21 contests scheduled for daylight play, 13 will be on Sundays, including a doubleheader April 17 with the Chicago Cubs. Three other day games will be on holidays, a Memorial day (May 30) twin bill against the Cubs and an unprecedented—for St. Louis—single contest on Labor day (Sept. 5) with Cincinnati.

Of the five other afternoon games, two will be played on Thursdays, one on a Friday and two Saturdays.

The Cardinals' first night game at home next year will be 8 o'clock on Monday, April 18, with Cincinnati as the opponent.

Nine home games each have been scheduled under the lights with the world champion New York Giants, the Philadelphia Phillies and Pittsburgh Pirates. Cincinnati, Milwaukee and the Brooklyn Dodgers will be met eight times here in night games and Chicago on five occasions.

Meyer said mail orders now were being accepted for all home games. Orders will be filled and delivered before opening of the Redbird ticket offices for general sale.

Reserved seats, priced at $1.85 each, can be obtained by check from the Cardinals' ticket office, Busch Stadium, St. Louis 7, Mo.

Tobin Rote Weighing Canadian Grid Offer

HOUSTON, Tex., Dec. 25 (AP) Tobin Rote, quarterback for the Green Bay Packers the past five years, said he may play Canadian football next season.

The former Rice quarterback reported he's considering two offers of more than $20,000 to play football in Canada.

"Both Toronto and Winnipeg have contacted me about playing for them next year," he said, "I'm not sure yet what decision I'll make but that's quite a bit of money. One thing worrying me is letting down Green Bay. If I leave it'll mean the Packers will be without a quarterback. I sure wouldn't want to hurt the Packers if I can help it."

Devine, Sisler Get New Jobs With Cardinals

Vaughn (Bing) Devine, general manager of the Cardinals' Rochester (N.Y.) International League farm club for six years, will return to the Redbird front-office and will be replaced by George Sisler Jr., it was disclosed last night by General Manager Dick Meyer.

Both Devine and Sisler, former minor league players, are native St. Louisans. Sisler, oldest son of the Browns' Hall of Fame first baseman, had been general manager the last two years at Columbus, O., until the Cardinals recently transferred their American Association franchise to Omaha, Nebr.

Devine will be administrative liaison man in the scouting and the minor league department at Busch Stadium, Meyer said, explaining:

"Because of the great importance of scouting, we feel our chief scout (Joe Mathes) should be as completely free of detail work as possible so that he can judge and evaluate ballplayers. . . . Creation of this new position places a re-emphasis on Joe's job of choosing players."

Devine, 38, is a 1938 graduate of Washington University, where he played baseball and basketball. He joined the Cardinals in 1939 as assistant publicity director, then served as business manager of minor league clubs—with time out for naval service—until 1948. He was at Johnson City, Tenn., Fresno, Calif., Decatur, Ill., and Columbus, Ga., before he became publicity director of the Cardinals for one year.

Sisler, 37, a Colgate graduate, joined the Redbird organization in 1940 and put in business manager terms at Albany, Ga., Winston-Salem, N.C., and Columbus, O. As a reserve Army captain, he gave up nearly five years of his career with military service in World War II and the Korean War.

Another St. Louisan, Bill Bergesch, replaced Sisler when Omaha moved up from Class A to Triple A.

South Wins Miami Thriller, 20-17, Over Ameche and Co.

MIAMI, Dec. 25 (UP)—The shattering plunges of Maryland Fullback Dick Bielski set up two final-period touchdowns tonight to carry the South to a 20-17 victory over the North in the seventh annual college all-star charity game before 37,847 fans in the Orange Bowl.

Bielski, a 206-pound mass of muscle, won the game's most valuable player award as he carried the ball 25 times for a net gain of 105 yards. The Baltimore plunger's efforts overshadowed even the great Alan Ameche, Wisconsin's All-America fullback who rolled up 84 yards in 14 cracks at the tough South line. Ameche won the North team's most valuable player award.

A pass interception by Miami's Carl Garrigus late in the final period set up the South's winning touchdown drive from the North 34-yard line.

Keep Play the Clincher.

Bielski hammered out 21 of the needed yards in four plunges and Garrigus went over from the two on a quarterback keep play with only one minute and 15 seconds remaining.

The "Rebels" got within striking distance earlier in the fourth period on a 76-yard scoring drive with Bielski again the workhorse. The big fullback's Maryland teammate, Halfback Ronnie Waller, tallied the touchdown on a one-yard plunge.

The North, led by the passing and ball faking of Indiana Quarterback Florian Helinski and the galloping drives of Ameche, outplayed the Southerners for nearly three periods. The North drew first blood in the second period with an 85-yard march. Helinski threw 24-yard passes to Eng Bob Long of U.C.L.A. and Halfback Ron Younker of Penn State and Ameche broke loose on one 18-yard sprint.

Michigan State's Bert Zagers skirted end for six and a touchdown and Minnesota End James Soltau added the extra point to put the North in front, 7-0, at halftime.

Field Goal Makes it 10-0.

Soltau, who tried four field goals, hit one from the eight-yard line early in the second half to give the North a 10-0 lead.

The South made its first score as the third period ended with Bielski putting on almost a one-man show for the 80-yard march. The six-foot fullback caught a pass from Maryland's Charley Boxold for 13 yards and carried the ball five times, the last for 14 yards and a touchdown. Oklahoma's Buddy Leake missed the extra point kick but made two of them good later.

Pat Abbruzzi of Rhode Island broke loose moments later for the longest run of the night. The 206-pound "fireplug" halfback took a short pass from Helinski and covered 52 yards in a spine-tingling run for the North's final touchdown.

MISSOURI U. PASSERS IN FINAL SHOW FOR FAUROT

	1	2	3	4	T.
BLUE	0	7	0	7	—14
GRAY	0	0	0	7	— 7

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 25 (AP)—Missouri's capable senior quarterbacks, Tony Scardino and Vic Eaton, put on a spectacular passing demonstration here today to lead the Northern all-stars to a 14-7 decision in the Blue-Gray football game.

It was the Yankees' first triumph since 1948 over the Confederates and only their fifth in 16 tries. A Christmas day crowd of 18,000 witnessed the thrilling show.

The Northerners, coached this time by Missouri's Don Faurot, scored in the second period on a two-yard plunge by Oklahoma Halfback Bob Herndon after long passes from Scardino covered most of the ground in a 50-yard touchdown drive.

Max Burkett, Iowa State fullback, took the ball away from the Rebels by intercepting L.S.U. Quarterback Al Doggett's pass at midfield to start the Yanks moving.

They struck again in the fourth quarter when Michigan Fullback Fred Baer hauled in a short Eaton pass that was tipped by a South player in the end zone. The scoring drive covered 87 yards during which Bob Bauman, Missouri fullback, led the way.

The North had gone 84 yards on six first downs in a row and had the ball on the 3 when the third quarter ended. Eaton accounted for much of the yardage with unerring tosses to Baer, Herndon, and Ends Charles Fairbanks and Don Kauth, both of Michigan State.

Maryland Tackle Dick Shipley made both conversions.

Fourth-Down Pass.

The Rebels' fourth period score came on a fourth-down pass from Doggett to Fullback Howie Wright of V.P.I., a play that earried 29 yards. Wright grabbed the ball just short of the goal and stepped across untouched. Doggett, the nation's twelfth best punter this season, added the extra point.

The Confederates let a touchdown slip from their grasp in the opening period when Alabama Halfback Corky Tharp lost the ball on the 1 after a 62-yard drive.

Bruising defensive line play almost stole the thunder from the boys in the backfield. Dale Meinert of Oklahoma A. and M., a 197-pound guard, was voted outstanding lineman of the game by sports writers who witnessed the show.

15 Rebel First Downs.

The Rebels piled up 15 first downs to 11 for the winners and netted 313 yards to 163 for the Yankees.

It was the passing of Scardino and Eaton when it counted most that spelled the difference. Eaton threw five aerials in the second half and connected on all of them for 47 yards. His two first-half passes fell incomplete.

Scardino threw six and completed only two, but they traveled 51 yards.

Doggett completed six out of 15 for 101 yards.

The game was hard-fought but clean. Only one penalty was called, five yards against the South for offsides.

Outgained, but . . .

Elston Howard Stars In San Juan Game; Larry Jackson Wins

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Dec. 25 (AP)—Elston Howard, the New York Yankees' rookie Negro catcher from St. Louis, stole the spotlight from Willie Mays today, smashing a two-run homer to give the San Juan team a 3-1 victory over leading Santurce club, in the Puerto Rican baseball league.

Howard's homer, his second of the season, came off Sam Jones, rookie Chicago Cubs' righthander, who suffered his fourth loss against 10 victories.

Mays, sensational New York Giants' centerfielder and the National League's Most Valuable Player, was held to one hit in four times at bat. He got a triple off Winning Pitcher Larry Jackson of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Two Champions in Trouble With N.B.A.

SANDY SADDLER, featherweight, and Arthur Cohen, bantamweight, are two champions who have been cut off the list of boxing champions recognized by the National Boxing Association.

The N.B.A. ordered Saddler to sign for a title defense by Dec. 14 or be deprived of his crown. He ignored the warning and the N.B.A. announced that, so far as it was concerned, he was no longer the 125-pound champion.

Then the N.B.A. agreed to recognize the match between Chamrern Songkitrat of Thailand and Arthur Cohen of France as being the bantamweight (118 pounds) title, provided the winner would agree to oppose the victor in a match between Raton Macias of Mexico and Nate Brooks of Chicago.

Cohen defeated Songkitrat in Bangkok and Macias won from Brooks but Cohen has not seen fit to honor the agreement to box Macias.

The New York Commission refused to go along with the N.B.A. on the Saddler matter and has not announced its action with regard to Cohen. And therein lies much of the trouble with boxing.

The N.B.A. is an organization of state commissions without real authority to enforce its rulings. If the New York body won't uphold the N.B.A. then the actions of that organization, which is composed of some 43 state bodies, is nullified.

True, you can't take away a boxer's championship by an official order. At least you can't take it away in the opinion of fans who feel that titles are won and lost in the ring or by retirement and not by the action of somebody sitting behind a desk.

And yet, unless there is some recognized authority for the control of boxing, situations arise which are detrimental to the best interests of all.

If Cohen agreed to meet the winner of the Macias-Brooks contest as a way to having his match with Songkitrat recognized as being for the championship, then he should sign to box Macias.

Saddler has not defended his 126-pound crown since he got out of the Army last April although he has had a number of what he termed "tune-up" bouts.

It's a Weighty Matter.

APPARENTLY the only reason Sandy hesitates to meet the man the N.B.A. wants him to meet Teddy (Redtop) Davis is a fear on the part of Saddler that he will have trouble making the weight. He's unusually tall for a featherweight and he has shown recently that paring down to 126 pounds is quite a chore for him.

Certainly, if he can make the limit without weakening himself, Saddler should brush aside Davis without too much trouble.

In Macias, Cohen would be taking on a boy who could give the Frenchman some real trouble. From all accounts, Macias has what it takes to be a real title contender. But Cohen has proved, too, that he's tops so it would be a good match.

And wouldn't that be something to see a Mexican and a Frenchman fight for a world title, possibly in an American city, where the money drawing power would be greater.

Both Cohen and Macias are very popular in their own communities, however, and the bout either in Mexico or in France could be depended upon to attract a huge throng of spectators—greater, probably, than would be attracted here.

Good Bout New Year's.

THERE is a real good contest scheduled to be held in New Orleans New Year's night between lightweights Ralph Dupas and Cisco Andrade. Both have gone great guns this year and the winner will be in line for a title match with Jimmy Carter for the 135-pound championship soon.

Archie Moore is really gunning for a shot at Rocky Marciano. From all indications Moore has an advertising firm conducting his campaign and one of the latest gadgets is a "wanted" circular offering a "reward for capture and delivery of Rocky to any ring in the world for the purpose of defending his heavyweight championship against the logical contender, Moore.

The "reward," states the circular: "The boxing public will see a great fight and witness the crowning of a new champion."

It is signed, "(Sheriff) Archie Moore."

Well, it's all good, clean fun.

League Tie-Ups Lack Real 'Natural'

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)—The appearance of Navy's triumphant football team, and a sizeable delegation of midshipmen, in the Sugar Bowl next Saturday will lend a touch of color and prestige to an otherwise drab series of year-end bowl games that wind up the unpredictable 1954 football season.

The Sugar Bowl, which has resisted the movement toward immutable bowl - conference hookups, hit the jackpot when it paired Na . and Mississippi for its post-season attraction. It won't decide any kind of championship, of course, but it will bring together the top Southeastern Conference team and the colorful Navy crew which attracted nation-wide attention by its thrilling victory over Army.

It's only the second time since bowl games began nearly 40 years ago that a service academy team has appeared in one of them. Navy played Washington to a 14-14 tie in the Rose Bowl in 1924, setting a precedent for this year's "Team Called Desire" to accept a post-season invitation.

Otherwise the year-end games shape up as a series of spectacles that will give nearly a half million spectators the benefits of fresh air, sunshine and wholesome entertainment, but won't prove a thing.

The champions of four major conferences, including the team voted No. 1 in the nation in the Associated Press ranking poll, will play in the games, but not against each other.

Bowl Ingredients.

Here's how the weekend games shape up:

Gator Bowl (Friday) at Jacksonville, Fla.—Auburn vs. Baylor.

Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif. —Ohio State vs. Southern California.

Sugar Bowl at New Orleans—Navy vs. Mississippi.

Orange Bowl at Miami, Fla.—Duke vs. Nebraska.

Sun Bowl at El Paso, Tex.—Texas Western vs. Florida State.

Tangerine Bowl at Orlando, Fla.—Omaha University vs. Eastern Kentucky.

Salad Bowl at Phoenix, Ariz. —Skyline Conference vs. Border Conference All-Stars.

East-West at San Francisco—Eastern All-Stars vs. Western All-Stars.

This shows several changes from last year's array. The Salad Bowl, which has entertained service teams for the past few years because of N.C.A.A. regulations, has come up with a variation of the all-star theme. The Gator Bowl moved up a day trying to break into the radio-television lineup and the Shrine East-West game returns to Jan. 1 because it falls on Saturday.

Two of the nation's top three teams, U.C.L.A. and Oklahoma, will be listed among the television watchers instead of the participants because of conference rules. A head-on meeting between Ohio State and U.C.L.A., the first and second ranking teams, in the Rose Bowl was ruled out because the Pacific Coast and Big Ten conferences don't let the same team appear in a bowl two years in a row. A similar Big Seven rule barred Oklahoma from an Orange Bowl meeting with Duke.

Also-Rans Step Forward.

Instead a three-time loser, Southern California, was chosen to make the Rose Bowl its twelfth bowl game. Nebraska, beaten four times, will represent the Big Seven in the Orange Bowl.

While these pairings may outrage the promoters' artistic sensibilities, apparently they haven't hurt the gate receipts. All the tickets for these two bowl games and the other big ones were sold long ago. Due to television, they'll probably have the biggest football audiences in history. The Rose, Sugar, Orange and Cotton Bowl and East-West games all will be televised on national networks.

There's ample precedent, too, for expecting some thrilling action and upsets in spite of the apparently lopsided pairings. The national champion team has played in a bowl game in three of the past four years and each time it was beaten. Ohio State and Omaha were the only bowl teams that survived the regular season without a loss. They could get it New Year's Day.

A Long Wish That Came True

Yogi the Yankee, Absentee King Of the Hill, Back at Home Plate

By Bob Broeg

Yogi Berra, the newest Yankee doodle dandy of the diamond, is back in town for the first time since he last stepped up to home plate at Busch Stadium against the late, lamented Browns.

That was Sept. 3, 1953, but—so help Mom's mostacioli—the successor to Joe DiMaggio as the big man of baseball's famed Bronx Bombers couldn't remember what he had done that final day.

The walking fire-plug from The Hill has traveled so far athletically, you see, that he throws singles back like minnows now and can even forget a home run and double, his contribution to an 8-5 Yankee victory before a slim swansong crowd of 2330.

Needled, block-buster Berra—he's 5-foot-7 and weighs 190—grinned good-naturedly. "But I ain't forgot," he said, "that I didn't do nuthin' here when I first came up, trying too hard, until I hit (Ned) Garver for two homers in one game."

Yogi, it's no secret, enjoyed an aversion to school that sons Larry, 5, and Timmy, 3, won't have the pleasure of sharing. Berra and especially pretty wife Carmen will see to it that the boys outdistance their old man academically.

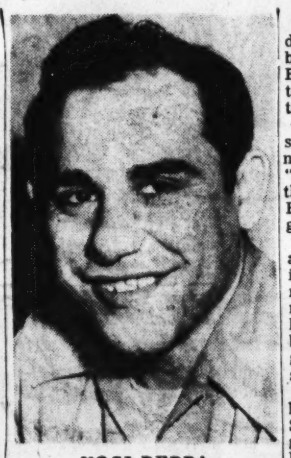
They'll be most fortunate kids, indeed, though, if they display the aptitude and instinct of the American League's Most Valuable Player—and the champion's confidence he reflected during time-out from a card game with the old gang at a neighborhood tavern.

The slugging Berra, baseball's most notorious—and best—badball hitter since Joe Medwick, had been asked if any pitcher bothered him particularly. At length he finally stumbled across the name of Jack Harshman, strikeout southpaw of the Chicago White Sox.

"He got me out eight,nine times in a row," Yogi recalled. "Then I said, 'I owe you something, you so-and-so.'"

What he owed Harshman, it developed, was a homer, single and two doubles in five times up, driving in five Yankee runs. "And it'd been 5 for 5," said Berra, proudly, "if he (Harshman) hadn't made a helluva stop on a ball I hit through the box."

Signed originally by the Yankees for the $500 bonus Branch



YOGI BERRA

Rickey and the Cardinals wouldn't give him, Yogi has jumped from $90 a month at Norfolk, Va., in 1943 to about $45,000 for 1955 after his second M.V.P. award. The first came in '51.

"But my best year was 1950," he explained. That season, even though he caught 151 games, hit .322, belted 28 homers and drove in 124 runs, his road roommate, Phil Rizzuto, the little Yankee shortstop, was named Most Valuable.

Yogi, now recognized for his defensive skill as well as his batting thump as a catcher, will be ready to move back to the outfield or even third base, where he played the final game of last season and threw out two men on sacrifice bunts, if the Yanks want to put another St. Louisan behind the plate. That would be Elston Howard, their first Negro.

"A good boy," said Berra, "and a good hitter."

Yogi smiled about the "good deal" with Baltimore that brought East Sider Bob Turley, Billy Hunter and Don Larson to the Yankees. He expressed belief the Orioles had profited, too.

"Jim McDonald can pitch and so can Harry Byrd if someone needles him," Berra said, frankly, "and Gene Woodling ain't through. Like Paul Richards said, Baltimore couldn't win with the guys they got rid of."

Yogi, his wife and two boys are spending the holidays visiting his parents here and Carmen's folks down on the farm near Salem, Mo., but Berra will have to interrupt the reunion to board a plane today for Los Angeles and an annual dinner of sports champions there.

Regretfully, therefore, he'll have to skip tomorrow night's St. Louis U.-Indiana basketball game, but he'll be back for the La Salle contest Jan. 2.

Billikens of all sports and sizes have been Berra's especial favorites since his Shaw playground days when the instructor, Bill Montgomery, St. Louis lineman of the Chile Walsh regime, used the sturdy immigrants' son as an animated tackling dummy.

Near 30, the new Yankee doodle dandy of the diamond, big man of the Bronx Bombers, is still as solid and, fortunately, as eager as when he and neighbor Joe Garagiola would slip off to play with (1) a glove and (2) Yogi's favorite lunch — Italian bread crammed with bananas and mustard.

The only time he lost enthusiasm conversationally, in fact, was when the Chicago White Sox and their many trades and pennant prospects were mentioned. He brushed them off with the throaty casualness of a latter-day Wallace Beery.

"A-w-w," Yogi Berra rumbled, frowning, "they've been making deals for three years — and they're still in third place."

Shivering Crowd at Miami Sees Favorite Win Christmas Stake

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 25 (AP) — Harvey C. Fruehauf's Precious Stone took the lead an eighth of a mile from home and hung on to win the $11,475 Christmas Handicap at Tropical Park today before 13,901 shivering fans.

Precious Stone, a factor all the way in the mile and a furlong feature, beat Blue Stone Farm's Scimitar by a nose in a tight finish. Mrs. S. Smith's French Bleu was third, two and a quarter lengths behind.

Precious Stone, favorite at 9 to 5, ran the distance in 1:50.4 over a fast track and paid $5.70, $3.80 and $3.40.

Rib Injury Will Not Keep Cassady Out of Bowl Game

PASADENA, Calif., Dec. 25 (AP) — Eleventh-hour injuries have cropped up in the camps of Ohio State and Southern California, rivals in the Rose Bowl football game Jan. 1.

Ohio State's star halfback, Howard Cassady, sustained a hairline crack of the ninth rib but team physicians, after viewing the crack under X-ray, said it would cause him no trouble unless further aggravated. They said he would be able to start and play against the Trojans without undue pain.

The injury was received in yesterday's hard scrimmage session at East Los Angeles Junior College. It was the last full scale scrimmage scheduled by Coach Woody Hayes of the Buckeyes.

In the Trojan camp, star halfback Don Arnett, a real speedster, suffered a twisted ankle and limped off Bovard Field. Medics said he incurred only a minor injury that would not keep him out of the Rose Bowl game, but some of the team followers were not optimistic, pointing out that a knee injury kept Arnett below best form in some of the later games of the season.

Coach Jess Hill turned the Trojans loose for the long weekend. And since most of them live in this immediate area, home for the holidays they went.

The squads will check in again Monday morning — the Trojans to Hill at Los Angeles's Town House, and the Buckeyes to Coach Hayes in the lobby of the Huntington-Sheraton.

Then back to the practice field for the final polishing for the New Year's day encounter.

There will be no severe contact work for either squad. But Hayes said he will continue with what he calls "controlled scrimmage."

This is a system somewhat less arduous than actual scrimmage, but considerably more damaging than dummy scrimmage.

It's Official Now---Harrison Vardon Winner

CHICAGO, Dec. 25 (AP)—Bob Toski today was certified by the PGA as tournament golf's all-time leading money winner for a single season and veteran Dutch Harrison of St. Louis was named winner of the Vardon trophy.

The 130-pound Toski, who pocketed the $50,000 top prize in the "world" championship at Tam O'Shanter, wound up the campaign with $65,819.81 in winnings. The previous high was Byron Nelson's $63,335.66 in war bonds in 1945.

In addition to the Tam victory, Toski also won the Baton Rouge, Azalea and Eastern Opens. A year ago the little pro who registers from Livingston, N.J., had total winnings of only $5627.

Harrison, pro at the Old Warson Club in St. Louis, won the Vardon trophy for the best average score per round. In 67 rounds he had 4718 strikes for a 70.41 average.

Jackie Burke Jr., was runner-up for Vardon honors with a 70.75 average in 89 rounds and also was second to Toski in winnings with $20,213.67.

Toski also had a good lead in the Ryder Cup race with 408 5-12 points. Tommy Bolt is second with 369.

The pros now take aim for the richest PGA winter tour in history. They will shoot for prizes totaling $250,000. The winter circuit opens Jan. 6 with the Pan American Open invitational at Inglewood, Calif.

Bears at .500, Likely To Improve

By Jack Rice

Washington University's basketball team has won three games and has lost three games, and it plainly says in the record book that this percentage is bound to improve in the second half of the season. The trick will be to get half-way home at .500 or better.

If they do that much the Bears can take a long, loving look at precedent and figure on a respectable percentage. Washington teams have been partial to the second half of the season when Blair Gullion has been coaching them.

Gullion's teams have been well over .500 in the last half of the five full seasons he has coached in seven years at Washington. His first season, 1947-48, the Bears won six and lost five after mid-season. The worst he's had it since then was 8 victories, three defeats.

The coach didn't have that precedent in mind when he said, "After the first of the year we're bound to improve in our scoring." It was dewy optimism, not dry statistics, inspiring him. The schedule gets an assist, too. The worst of it is behind them, and the sophomoric Bears should be able as the year goes on to profit from experience gained the hard way in December, notably against Big Ten teams.

After their defeat last week at Purdue, a holiday rest period began. That ends this week, and there will be no classes to distract the players from their noncredit course in basketball. This happy, unusual situation causes Gullion to say, "We may even have a double practice or two."

They do have a double order for this week. The Bears will play San Jose State College Thursday night, and Denver University Saturday night. Both games will be at the Field House, a spot the Bears won't leave for two weeks. They have games scheduled there Jan. 5 (Hamline) and Jan. 7 (Missouri Mines).

That will bring them within one game of the half-way mark in this season's schedule. Between now and that dividing line, anything over .500 is spill-proof gravy, it says in the statistics, for Gullion's second-semester average for the five years is .709, on 39 victories and 16 defeats. That's passing at any school.

Six Unbeaten Teams in Normandy Meet Opening Tomorrow

WRAY'S COLUMN

Eight-Year Davis Cup Deadlock Nearing End.

AUSTRALIAN and United States Davis Cup teams tomorrow will resume hostilities which have continued annually, without interruption, for eight years—since the post-war resumption of this great international event.

This year finds the United States officials for the first time since the disaster of last December, feeling very hopeful that the big Davis trophy will be brought back to this country after its four year sojourn abroad.

This season Tony Trabert and Vic Seixas seem to have shaken off some of the jitters that wrecked their chances last year. . . . Non-playing Captain Billy Talbert's prediction of a 5-0 victory for the Americans is hardly reasonable, however.

The best we can deduce from the news is that there is a fair chance the Americans will take two of the singles—and perhaps one of the other two—and the doubles.

The great though youthful Lewis Hoad has not been himself in Australian competition recently. . . . But if he's at tops, that 5-0 forecast may turn out to be just whistling past the graveyard. . . . And Ken Rosewall, the Aussies' other singles ace, is regarded as double tough. . . . And (keep your fingers crossed) the result may all be up to the showing of Tony Trabert. . . . However, it is significant that even in America six months ago few would risk a dime on our boys' chances, whereas now the cheering section already is at work.

Davis Cup Overdue to Return, After 4 Years.

NEITHER team's players rank with the best that either country has shown in other years. . . . Yet a world record gate already is assured. . . .

In the eight post-war years, each team has won four consecutive challenge rounds—this will be the rubber. . . . A defeat also would mean the Aussies would have to return the cup they have held four years.

Maybe you wonder at the success of a small nation of only 10,000,000 in standing off our players chosen from a population 16 times as great! . . . And don't get the idea that it's because this nation is slipping. . . . Australia always has been formidable in Davis Cup challenge rounds, winning its first from Great Britain in 1907. . . . Since that graduation the Aussies have been in every nation's hair continually. . . . Next to the United States they have won more challenge rounds than any other country.

Much of Australia's success stems back to the team which first won for it, made up of Anthony Wilding and Norman Brookes, a wonderful southpaw. . . . Wilding was killed in the first world war Gallipoli campaign, but Brookes (now Sir Norman) after helping in several cup campaigns, inoculated his nation with the tennis spirit and helped build up enthusiasm—plus a tennis system that still functions in youth training.

Australia always has been a great sports country, especially in swimming, track, racing and professional fighting. . . . It rates a bow all around the globe, for high sporting ethics.

Desperate Efforts to Restore Trojan Prestige.

A LOT of overtime has been spent building up the Rose Bowl game by the Los Angeles press. . . . It seems all the Trojan lame and halt are again ready for the sacrifice. . . . "That last quarter" against U.C.L.A. and "bad judgment" also helped cause the three defeats of Southern Cal during the season, are some of the morale rebuilding arguments.

"The same mistakes won't be made again" and this time "the real Trojan grid power will be shown" against Ohio State, we read.

But the public seems allergic to that kind of talk. . . . And the odds makers show what they think by giving the Trojans a 14-point margin. . . . Ohio State beat more and better teams than the Trojans—and finished unbeaten. . . . In the Big Ten were some real tough nuts to crack—stronger than all but one of the Coast Conference members.

But my private eye out there reports that the Pasadena battle ground will be a sell-out and could use still more space.

About the other Bowl Games? . . . General Manager Fred Digby saved the day for the Sugar Bowl when he landed Navy as an opponent for Mississippi. . . . This is regarded as being so close a contest that the Middies will be giving Mississippi only one point handicap in the play cards.

By the same margin Arkansas will be in the Cotton Bowl New Year's day—underdog to Georgia Tech—and that is likely to produce a lot of talk and elbow bending, far into New Year's eve. Those Razorbacks have seemed extremely tough.

The handicappers don't think very much of Nebraska's chances in the Orange Bowl against Duke. Nor do we.

The Big Four bowl programs seem to be somewhat drab, compared with those of other years. . . . But there's still a reasonable chance that Old Man Dope will furnish an upset—as the capsheaf of a shocking season.

Beaumont, Cleveland Seeded 1, 2

By Harold Tuthill

Almost as good as a three-ring circus will be the 32-team, twin basketball tournaments to be run off at Normandy High School in four days, starting tomorrow. Of the schools competing in the twenty-second annual event, there will be six opening the grind with undefeated records.

Chief among the unbeaten schools are Beaumont, seeded No. 1 and placed in the Green Division for competition the first day at the Junior High, 7855 Natural Bridge, and Cleveland, seeded second, and put in the Red Division where it will start the defense of its Red title at the Senior High gym, 6701 Natural Bridge.

Other undefeated schools are Clayton, Ferguson, University City and Hannibal.

Beaumont vs. DeAndreis.

First round of play for all Green games will be at Junior High. After that the championship round games will be moved over to Senior High for the rest of the tournament. Early consolation round games, however, will be run off at Junior High.

Beaumont (6-0) will meet De Andreis (2-4) at 8 o'clock tomorrow night and the powerful Bluejackets will oppose a Wildcat team they walloped, 68-38, in the opening game of the season. Big guns in the Beaumont attack are Rich Rogers, Don Costello, Ron Flood and Art Muegler.

Prior to Beaumont's upper bracket meeting with De Andreis, there will be four early games, the first at 11 o'clock in the morning when Roosevelt (2-4) starts the ball rolling against St. Charles (4-5). Maplewood (7-1) will play Pacific at 12:30, Hannibal (4-0) will oppose Berkeley (1-5) at 2 and Kirkwood (3-3) will meet Hancock (5-2) at 3:30.

The last-named game promises to be a humdinger if their early season records count for anything.

Big Team From Hannibal.

Hannibal will come here with a pretty husky aggregation, led by Jack Hammock, 177-pound marksman. Other Pirates on Jim Ballinger's starting five are Leon Schutze, Gay Palmer, Joe Johnson and either Bud Youle or Jerry Leeper. Among his reserves are Bud Kilham, 180, and Gardy Secker, 171.

Hannibal is one of three outstate schools in the tourney. Bismarck, a crowd-pleaser of some 10 years ago when John (Red) Reagan, its present coach, and Roy Pilliard were stars, will be back again. Pacific, from Franklin county, also is returning.

Preceding the Beaumont-DeAndreis game will be a 5 o'clock meeting between Clayton (3-0) and a McKinley team (3-4) which has won three straight games after losing four. At 6:30 Wellston (0-5) will meet Central (2-3) and at 9:30 Coyle (4-2) will play Soldan-Blewett (4-3).

Ferguson Plays St. Mary's.

Competition in the Red division likewise will start at 11 a.m. tomorrow when Ferguson (6-0) will oppose St. Mary's (1-5) Ferguson hasn't been as excited about its basketball since the days when Joel Hall, now at Riverview Gardens, and Aleck Burgess, now at Ferguson, romped on the hardwood under the direction of Fred Schulze.

Ritenour (1-3) will play Southwest (3-2) at 12:30 p.m., Cleveland (6-0) will oppose Bismarck (0-3) at 2 and Riverview Gardens (2-2) will meet Webster (3-1) at 3:30, in upper bracket engagements.

In the lower bracket University City (4-0) will oppose St. Peter's of St. Charles (1-8) at 5, Chaminade (1-5) will meet Ladue (3-2) at 6:30, St. Louis U. High (4-2) will play Brentwood (3-2) at 8 and Mercy (1-3) will oppose Normandy (2-4) at 9:30.

In addition to Beaumont and Cleveland, other seeded teams, in order, are St. Louis, Maplewood, Kirkwood, University City, Ferguson and Clayton.

Admission is 50 cents for afternoon sessions, 75 cents for all evening sessions except Thursday's final which will be $1.

Saxton and Delaney To Meet in Non-Title Bout in Akron Jan. 14

AKRON, O., Dec. 25 (AP) — Welterweight Champion Johnny Saxton will meet Ronnie Delaney of Akron Jan. 14 in a 10-round non-title bout at the Akron Armory, Promoter Bob Heath announced.

Saxton copped the welter crown last October by defeating Kid Gavilan at Philadelphia. He has suffered two defeats in 51 fights.

Delaney has been beaten once in 63 starts.

They will enter the ring at 149 pounds, two above the welterweight limit.

Missouri vs. Nebraska In Tourney Opener

KANSAS CITY, Dec. 25 (AP) —At least five teams are being considered championship threats in the Big Seven Conference's ninth annual basketball tournament opening in Municipal Auditorium Monday night.

Only one team, the defending champion Kansas Jayhawks, will take an undefeated early-season record into the meet that ends Thursday night. Phog Allen's Jayhawks, with only guard Dallas Dobbs back from last season's starting unit, have won their first four games.

The more highly regarded teams are Missouri (4-2), Kansas State (3-2), Colorado (3-3), Kansas and the guest California Bears (7-1). Iowa State (4-1), operating under a new coach, Bill Strannigan, can't be counted out of the picture.

Nebraska (2-3) and Oklahoma (0-4) could come in for upset victories.

Colorado and Oklahoma will meet in the first game. Missouri and Nebraska in the second Monday contest.

In the lower bracket Tuesday night will be Kansas and Iowa State in the opener and Kansas State vs. California.

Intermediate Champ Now A Silver Skates Senior

By Harold Flachsbart

The entry of Stan Fail, Paramount (Calif.) national intermediate skating champion, was received last night for the big Silver Skates carnival Jan. 9 at The Arena. As was the case the past several years, the big St. Louis show of the year will be sponsored by the Post-Dispatch.

Fail, who easily captured intermediate honors here last January, will be a contender for the senior title, since he has passed the 17-year age limit. A big, strapping power skater, the Californian is considered a good Olympic possibility. He is training now at Minneapolis for the Olympic trials.

The men's field for the Silver Skates got a good shot in the arm last week when Bill White, 21-year-old St. Louis U. marketing graduate, won the two-mile grind at the Winter Garden in the city championship series. It was White's first big win and proved that Frank Till, the man who had been mopping up in this division will have plenty of competition from here out.

Fail, who proved such a hit here last year and then went back to the Coast and said many nice things about the St. Louis carnival, may be at his best at the two-mile distance but here he also will skate the one mile, half mile and 440. As an intermediate in the 1954 event he spread-eagled the field in mile and 440-yard distances.

Points count 30 for a first place, 20 for second and 10 for third.

Free Sports Jamboree Tomorrow at Armory

Young men between the ages of 17 and 20 and their parents are invited by the 138th Infantry, Missouri National Guard, to attend a sports jamboree tomorrow night at 7:30 at the Armory, 3676 Market street.

As highlights, the Tank Company will play the Friscos in a basketball game. Alan Carvel, district tennis professional, National Junior Champion Al Holtman and Neal Drury, boys' indoor doubles titleholder, will give a tennis exhibition.

A Tank Company rifle team will shoot against C.B.C. marksmen, and diving and swimming will be shown by the champion Londoffs — James, George and Eleanor—and other standouts, Frank Sakowski and William Metroulas.

New infantry weapons and a movie will be shown and snacks served, Director Ronald L. Gallagher said.

71-Year-Old Wins Swim.

Simpkins and Kutis Replay Next Sunday

By Dent McSkimming

Soccer fans here will have to wait until next Sunday to witness the choice match of the season. Simpkins and Kutis will replay their tie game of a week ago on Jan. 2 instead of this afternoon as originally scheduled. A disagreement over the rental charge for Oakland Stadium led to the postponement, ordered by National Open Cup Commissioner Harry Luecke.

If the pleasant weather holds up, the delay may bring out a greater attendance than could be expected today. Television broadcast of the National Professional Football League's championship match at Cleveland was considered a serious counter attraction. There will be no such rival free show next Sunday.

But, it is again apparent to the fans that the planning and building and the administration of soccer here lags far behind the actual physical competition. If the executives were as alert and capable as the athletes whose destinies they control, soccer would not be in want of its own stadium. There would be fewer factional fusses, less confusion when an opportunity for an attractive show arises.

The outcome of last Sunday's game, in which each side scored only one goal, was something of a surprise to many fans, even those on the Simpkins' side. It was generally expected that there would be a winner and many of those who have followed both teams through eight weeks of play regarded the Kutis forward line as capable of at least three goals.

Pre-game estimates went into the ashcan because each team defended better than it had in previous games. Kutis forwards had very few good scoring chances; Simpkins had a greater number of such opportunities but finished off with bad shots.

Some of the most interesting young soccer players of years are scattered through the two teams. John and Pete Traina, and Nicky Borzillo have given the aging Simpkins players a new impetus; Tom Julius, Tommy Schultz, Freddie Vasquez and Jimmy Murphy are in the young star class for Kutis. Veterans who have seen lots of national cup and even international competition form the foundation of both teams. Either club should make a worthy representative of St. Louis in the intercity matches which follow this Missouri final.

Commissions Partly to Blame For Boxing Troubles --- Louis

MIAMI, Dec. 25 (UP)—Joe Louis blames boxing commissions, greedy managers and lazy fighters for the shortcomings of the fight game.

Louis was here with Light Heavyweight Paul Andrews, whom he will help train for a Dec. 29 nationally televised bout with Boardwalk Billy Smith.

"Boxing commissions are to blame for a lot of things that happen in bouts, and if there are things wrong it's partly their fault," said the 40-year-old former heavyweight king.

"You read about these underworld characters in boxing," Louis said, "but it's the commissions that license them."

"Today, a manager gets a boy with 10, or even seven, straight wins and he immediately wants to throw him into a main event," said the Brown Bomber. "The young boy usually gets beat just because the manager is greedy. They push them too fast."

Louis, looking fat at 235 pounds, said that "many of the boys fighting now just won't take training seriously. They want to be main event fighters and get main event money, but they don't want to train. They're lazy."

Eight St. Louisans to Seek Match-Game Pin Championships

FREE THROWS
by Robert Morrison

Star on Horizon.

BILL RUSSELL of San Francisco's all-college tournament champions was named most valuable player in that Oklahoma City event but he was more of a standout than news dispatches indicated. In fact, Artie Eilers, commissioner of the Missouri Valley Conference, puts him in an all-time class.

"He's the smoothest piece of machinery I've ever seen on a basketball court," the commissioner flatly observed on his return from the tournament.

The 205-pound, six-foot-nine Russell is a junior with the San Francisco team which has upset Coast standout U.C.L.A., walloped the Valley's Wichita, and overpowered the well-rated eastern team, George Washington.

Eilers pulled out all the stops.

"He's the most relaxed player, getting the most done with the least effort, that I've seen in years," said Eilers. "When San Francisco played Wichita it had a 23-3 lead before you could say Jack Robinson. San Francisco threw up six points, six went in and Russell made three of them."

The commissioner compared him with other college greats, including George Mikan.

"Better than Mikan?" Eilers was asked.

"Yes," he said, "because Russell doesn't use any elbows."

"As slick as Macauley?"

"Yes, he's slick—as slick even as Bob Kurland. I was amazed. I couldn't believe my own eyes and most observers seemed to be similarly impressed."

Russell "has everything," Eilers continued—he has a good hook shot, a good jump shot, he's fancier than Walt Dukes, plays a lot of good defense, and has great jumping ability.

"In one game San Francisco put in a sub for him after getting a good lead," Eilers related. "Play was stopped when Russell was at the far end of the court from his own bench. When Russell went to his bench—some 90 feet away—he needed just 10 strides to get there."

In this connection, Eilers made a comparison between Russell and Tom Gola of La-Salle, who is rated the greatest player in the college game today. "With that stride Russell appears to move with less effort than Gola," the commissioner said.

Billikens' Busy Scout.

TOM GLENNON, St. Louis U. assistant coach who got his fill of basketball scouting by watching eight teams at Oklahoma City, then jumping to Lexington the next night to watch the four at Kentucky, echoed Eilers's sentiments on Russell.

"Russell's the best big man in basketball today without a doubt," Glennon said. "With his long arms he's the equivalent of a man who is seven-foot-three. He can get off the floor as high as any man in basketball, regardless of height. I don't think he's a great shooter, but he's a deadly scorer on the boards and is likely to block just as many opposition shots as he makes for his own team."

After seeing the two holiday tournaments, Glennon rated Kentucky the best and San Francisco second.

Tom made a point about the newest Adolph Rupp edition, a team which has been compared favorably with last year's Kentucky team which Rupp called his best.

"This is the best-coached Kentucky team I've seen," Glennon asserted. "Before, Rupp had two or three good players who carried the load, but the whole first team is strong. Kentucky on the night it defeated LaSalle was the best team in the country. The Kentucky boys were sharp and they were great rebounders. There was one thing about it, though; LaSalle lost one of its best men, Bob Maples, who turned an ankle in the first four minutes of play, and it didn't have a very strong bench to begin with. Kentucky's bench seemed a bit weak, too, but in that game the team played a nearly perfect game."

Utah is an excellent team, too, Glennon said.

"It had Kentucky beaten in that first game with a seven-point lead and about six minutes to go. But then Utah played it too cautious, passed up a few shots, then made a few mistakes and the steady set offense of Kentucky caught up and won."

Valley Scramble.

AFTER seeing Wichita, Houston, Tulsa and Oklahoma A.&M. in the all-college tournament, Glennon concluded that this season's Missouri Valley race will be a scramble with St. Louis having as good a chance as any team.

"I think every team may lose three games," he said. "Wichita and Houston are no better than the rest of the teams and if we lose only two games, we should win the title."

Lynch Named Referee For Cotton Bowl Game

J. C. (Jimmy) Higgins of Dallas, former S.M.U. player, will be the umpire. The head linesman will be James (Ed) Copeland of Norcross, Ga., a graduate of Oglethorpe University. The field judge will be Clifford (Frenchy) Domingue of Port Arthur, Tex.

Carter in Bid for 3d In a Row

Eight St. Louis bowlers—six men and two women—will seek honors in the fourteenth annual match-game championships to be held at the Chicago Coliseum, Jan. 14 to 23, inclusive. Leading the parade will be Don Carter, seeking his third consecutive championship. The other St. Louisans will be Billy Welu, who recently won the city match-game title; Ray Bluth, former holder of the honors, and Claude (Pat) Patterson. Hank Lauman, who now makes his home in Pico, Calif., is the other who will seek honors in the men's division.

In the women's competition, Vi Kinney and Ann Maloney will seek the championship now held by Mrs. Marion Ladewig of Grand Rapids, Mich. Mrs. Ladewig will be trying for her sixth consecutive title.

One hundred and sixty men will compete in the men's tourney, while the field in the women's division will total 64. The stars will shoot for $13,955 in prize money.

Five of a Kind

—By a Post-Dispatch Photographer.

Kicking Soccer Too Cold, Pop Said, So Mirth Brothers Found Their Fun on Basketball Floor

By Neal Russo

Rudolph Mirth used to tell his boys about the time back in Austria when he was troubled with frost-bite while kicking soccer on snow-covered fields.

"If you want to play ball, choose an indoor sport," he told Rudy (now 27), Bill (26), Al (24), Frank (23) and Don (21).

The five Mirth boys took Pop's advice and became warm basketball players, most of the time on the same team. Right now their Meramec Caverns squad is a Muny League standout.

The Mirth family (there are three sisters, all younger than the boys) grew up just two blocks from Central High, where the boys learned the round ball game under Vern Bradburn. The brothers got in some early practice at home, tossing rubber balls through the transom or through tin cans nailed up in the attic.

Pop Bowls Now.

Papa Mirth switched from soccer to bowling, another warm sport, when he came to America. He carries a 175 average. Basketball he leaves up to his boys.

The Mirths learned a lot under Bradburn, especially defense, and they got quite a few pointers, too, from Warren Schuermann and Bob Schapp in the Lutheran leagues at Bethlehem gym. Playing at times as a one-family team, the Mirths became almost perennial champions.

They're looking ahead to the Muny title, now. And then a crack at the Ozark championship. During these playoffs they expect a big lift from Don, baby of the squad, who is saving his next furlough from Fort Campbell, Ky., until then.

Don, who has appeared in the Caverns' last two games while home on convalescent leave, is an inch short of six feet (like Bill and Frank) but plays the boards like an Ed Macauley. A ballhawk who can drive hard and well, Don is known as "Perpetual Motion." He never seems to tire.

'They Shall Not Pass.'

Don and his four brothers all stand out defensively, Rudy, who played two years at Harris Teachers College, is rated one of the best guards in the area. Bill has shackled some of the best shots around. So have Don and Al.

Bill has a deadly one-hand push shot from around the free throw circle. Rudy is better from close in. Frank and Al are good set shots who have thrown in many a key basket. Al's first field goal this season beat the defending champion Bob Soells.

The brothers have been at this basketball about 14 years. They tried some hoc-soc, but that soccer, brrrr.

Six Holy Rosary Teams in C.Y.C. Soccer Playoffs

Today's schedule of C.Y.C. soccer playoffs is dotted with teams representing Holy Rosary Parish. Out of the eight teams placed in competition at the start of the season, six Holy Rosary teams have won group titles, and are now engaged in post-season playoffs.

St. Philip Neri is not far behind and St. Paul, too, has proved a good soccer "farm."

One St. Philip team has taken the major honor, the Senior squad having clinched the North (Bishop Cody) League title with nine straight victories. Today, St. Philip opposes Holy Rosary in the second game of the doubleheader at Fairground Grounds One.

Semifinals in the Parochial playoffs will be played at Fairground Park, Wednesday, it was announced by C.Y.C. secretary Bob Guelker. The draw: Holy Rosary meets St. Paul on Grounds One; Resurrection opposes St. Louise on Grounds Two. The games will start at 3 o'clock.

Jeffersons' Miss Guibor Leads Mid-City Girls' Basket League Scorers

The defending champion Jefferson Merry Maids, unbeaten after seven games, also have three of the top four individual scorers in the Mid-City girls' basketball league.

For the Jeffersons, who have a three-game lead over the DeMenils, Dorothy (Porky) Guibor, sharp-shooting little forward, is leading the league with 74 points and teammates' Joyce Gasser and Kate Kaufmann are third and fourth with 66 and 58.

Kate Reilly of the third-place Knodels is third with 69 points.

Behind Jefferson in the team race are the DeMenils with a 4-3, Knodels 3-3, Londoffs 2-5 and the Rock Alumnae 1-6.

Browns Try Again Today To Beat Lions for Title

CLEVELAND, Dec. 25 (AP)—With past history and the betting odds favoring the visitors, the Detroit Lions and Cleveland Browns meet here tomorrow for the third straight year in a contest for the world's pro football crown.

The Lions come into the fray backed by two years as champions of the National Football League. In addition, they have the 14-10 victory in last Sunday's encounter with the Browns to bolster their morale.

But facts such as those are no reason to discount the Browns, a team which more than proved itself in its own Eastern Division this year and has been in every championship game back through 1946. Beaten in the title games the last two seasons by Detroit and in 1951 by Los Angeles, the Browns' last championship was in 1950. They should be hungry for a new one now.

Brown Hasn't Given Up.

Cleaveland Coach Paul Brown, never one to make strong statements in advance of a game, appears just a bit put out about the odds. To one question about the odds going to the Lions after last Sunday's loss, he replied: "They're going to let us play the game, aren't they?"

Brown thinks the result last week was partly due to the snowy weather and bad footing. He also points out that his veteran quarterback, Otto Graham, didn't do much passing in that event.

Graham has a special incentive to spur him tomorrow. This may be his last season and he never has been able to complete a touchdown pass against Detroit in two regular season games and as many title playoffs. On the other hand, Detroit's star quarterback, Bobby Layne, passed for the winning points in the 1953 championship game, and then again last week.

One factor Coach Brown could be considering as the big day nears, is the talent the Lions have for coming up with a new threat right at playoff time.

Walker, Doran and Girard.

Two years ago, Doak Walker had ridden the bench a good part of the season because of a leg injury. Then in the championship game, he ran 67 yards for his only touchdown of the season as the Lions won, 17-7.

Last year it was Jim Doran who provided the punch in the clinch. Doran had been used primarily on defense through the season, but in the closing minutes of the championship game Coach Buddy Parker moved him in on offense. Doran proceeded to run by the secondary and into the clear to grab a 33-yard pass for a touchdown, his only one of the year. The Lions won that one, 17-16, thanks to Doran.

Then just last Sunday, Earl (Jug) Girard proved a surprise for the Clevelanders. Thought of here mostly as a hard-running halfback and a good punter, Girard picked off four passes, the last one for the winning touchdown.

Tomorrow's game will be carried on the Dumont television network.

English Soccer Leaders Tumble

LONDON, Dec. 25 (AP)—The powerful Wolverhampton Wanderers suffered their second straight defeat at home, losing 3-1 to Everton today, and fell into a tie for first place with Sunderland in the First Division of the English Soccer League.

Sunderland tied Huddersfield Town, 1-1, in the afternoon after the Wanderers were beaten in a morning game. As a result Wolverhampton and Sunderland each had 29 points for a one-point lead in the standings over Charlton Athletic and Manchester United.

Tied for fifth with 27 points each, only two points behind the two pace-setters in the closely bunched race, were Chelsea and Huddersfield Town.

Dave Hickson, Everton center forward, sparked his team to its upset triumph with two goals.

Wolverhampton had held undisputed possession of first place since Oct. 31 when the Wanderers broke a tie with Sunderland.

Charlton moved into its tie for third with idle Manchester United by routing Sheffield Wednesday, 3-0. Manchester United is in a favorable position since the team has played one game less than the two leaders and Charlton.

Moments in a Year.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.

IN the spring, an extortionist was working on Ted Atkinson and Conn McCreary, threatening to kill the jockeys, threatening to chop off McCreary's hands. Considering the sights that can be seen any racing day at Hialeah, it was a difficult assignment when G-men told McCreary to search the crowd around the walking ring for a suspicious-looking stranger. Conn reported back, defeated.

"They all look suspicious," he said.

At last the extortionist made a midnight appointment for the payoff; accompanied by their wives, the jockeys were to meet him at a Miami filling station. Instead of Martha Atkinson and Norma McCreary, two G-men disguised as women accompanied the riders.

"One wasn't bad looking," Atkinson said later, "the other looked like Edward G. Robinson."

"I had the pretty one," Conn said.

"I knew the guy was a psycho all the time," Ted said after the culprit was trapped, "but that's the trouble. You never know which way those fellows will jump." His gaze ran over the apprentice riders cluttering the jockey room. "It's like riding behind some of these bug boys. . . ."

Phil Remembered.

IN the Yankees' training camp in St. Petersburg, Phil Rizzuto spoke sympathetically of the rookies working out at jobs they knew they couldn't win. Gus Triandos, for example, was downhearted because Casey Stengel was trying to convert him into a catcher, as if anybody were going to beat out Yogi Berra.

Rizzuto knew. He'd been through the same thing away back in 1941 when he and Gerry Priddy came up from Kansas City to struggle for the jobs of Frank Crosetti and Joe Gordon. At first the only Yankees who'd even speak to the two rookies were Lefty Gomez and Crosetti.

"I liked Crosetti," Phil said, "He was good to me. But every time he made a good play, I winched. I wanted him to go good. I wanted the team to win. But still I winched. That was my job going up the creek."

The worst day was the one when Joe McCarthy, having opened the season with Rizzuto and Priddy, benched them both.

"I met Priddy coming out of Mr. McCarthy's office," Phil recalled, "and he was crying. 'He's benching me.' Gerry told me. I was consoling him, telling him he'd soon be back in there, when the club houseman said, 'Hey, Rizzuto, you're wanted.' Then I came out bawling. . . ."

DERBY week at Churchill Downs. Visitors in the stable area Gawked at the Betty Grable-Harry James candidate, James Session, a dark colt, the tallest, skinniest critter on the grounds. "Looks like Connie Mack in blackface," a man said.

Max Hirsch had no horse behind game little Determine in the Derby, nor in the field that blaze-faced Hasty Road whipped in the Preakness, but he had a horse in his barn. Heading south in January, the "New York Times," Jim Roach and his bride, Allene, had visited Max in winter quarters in Columbia, S. Car. Somebody mentioned that there'd be a third Roach along later.

"What'll you name him?" Max asked.

"It'll be just about Belmont time," Jim said, "so if it's a boy, we'll name him for the Belmont winner. The way I see it now, we'll call him Fisherman Roach."

"Come with me," Max said, and he led them to a stall where a brown son of Heliopolis munched hay. "Your young one's name," Max said, "might turn out to be High Gun."

This was five months before the Belmont Stakes, and it accounts for the initials of Margaret H. G. Roach. . . .

"Bit by bit," a fellow said later, "you appreciate the scope of the man. There are guys around who say, 'I remember when Gene Sarazen won his first National Open. I was there.' They were there! Hell, Gene Sarazen caddied for Grantland Rice, and boasts about it."

Seixas and Rosewall Are Foes

SYDNEY, Australia, Dec. 25 (UP)—Billy Talbert, America's Davis Cup captain, got just what he wanted for Christmas today when the draw for Monday's first challenge round matches against Australia pitted Tony Trabert against Lew Hoad in the first singles contest.

Vic Seixas, United States singles king who seldom has much luck when he plays the opening match drew Ken Rosewall in the second contest. The Trabert-Hoad match will begin at 9 p.m. (St. Louis time) Sunday.

The players switch opponents for Wednesday's final singles matches with Rosewall meeting Trabert and Seixas playing Hoad in the last contest of what may be one of the closest challenge rounds in history. It will be the richest because 25,578 tennis-happy Aussie fans will jam White City Stadium each of the three days to contribute a gross gate of $382,000.

The teams for Tuesday's doubles match will not be announced until that day. Seixas and Trabert, barring accidents, are certain to represent the United States. Hoad and Rosewall probably will be the Aussie team unless one or both play poorly Monday.

America is a slight favorite. A bettor can get even money on Australia but must lay 5 to 4 to get a bet on the Yanks.

The draw got full-dress treatment. Robert Menzies, Australia's prime minister, drew the names of Hoad and Rosewall from the huge, bowl-like Davis Cup as it rested on the center court's green turf under the bright sun. Amos Peaslee, the United States Ambassador, drew the names of the American players from the envelope Talbert had placed in the cup. About 5000 fans watched the draw.

Talbert and Manager Harry Hopman of the Australian team both were enthusiastic about the outcome of the draw. But most observers believed Talbert, who has predicted a 5-0 sweep for America, got the biggest Christmas gift.

The winner of the first match figures to give his country a big psychological edge. And Talbert had hoped the confident Trabert, who appears to be at the top of his hard-hitting game, would draw the opening match. Talbert said he didn't care who the Cincinnati belter met in the opener but Hoad has been in a slump until he perked up in recent practice sessions. He was the star of last year's 3-2 triumph over Seixas and Trabert and it will be a heavy blow to Aussie morale if he loses the first match.

However, the Aussies hope to get at least a split in the opening matches because the slender Rosewall has defeated Philadelphia's Seixas the last eight times they have met.

"I couldn't be happier," Talbert said. "Tony wanted to meet Hoad in the first match. Vic will win the second and give America an ideal setup."

"We will take both singles matches against Seixas," Aussie captain Hopman said. "Lew will beat Trabert. But Rosewall's match against Trabert and the result of the doubles will be an even split for both nations."

Today's draw was just the reverse of the 1953 challenge round pairings which pitted Seixas against Hoad in the first match and Trabert against Rosewall in the second.

In that competition at Melbourne, Hoad overpowered Seixas, 6-4, 6-2, 6-3 in the first match, but Trabert made it 1-1 with a 6-3, 6-4, 6-3 triumph over Rosewall in the second match. America was confident of victory when Trabert and Seixas crushed Hoad and Rex Hartwig, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4, in the doubles to lead, 2-1. But Hoad then beat Trabert, 13-11, 6-3, 2-6, 3-6, 7-5, and Rosewall defeated Seixas, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4, in an astonishing rally by the youngest players ever to represent a country in the challenge round.

Jack Kramer, American professional, who helped train the United States team, said he believed the Americans would win, 4-1 or 5-0 "if Trabert wins the opening match." Kramer said Australia couldn't count on winning the final match because "Seixas constantly beats Hoad."

Ted Schroeder, another former United States cup star who is helping coach the current team, picked his countrymen to win, 3-2.

Shurtleff Team, 4-0, In Prairie League

Shurtleff College's basketball team will be after its sixth consecutive victory when the Pioneers play Millikin University, Thursday. Included in the string are four straight triumphs in the Prairie College Conference, with victims including Concordia of Springfield, Blackburn, Greenville, and Eureka.

A 74-57 victory over Ottawa, Kans., was No. 5 in succession for the Alton school, which has an overall record of six and one. The loss was a 91-89 overtime contest with Lincoln University of Jefferson City, Mo.

Three lettermen form the foundation of the Shurtleff team. They are Jim Carey of Dupo, Art Borchers and Don Harmon, both of Granite City. Four players have shared the remaining positions. In this group are Jim Bain, Granite City; Bob Hunter, South Roxana; Ralphie Freeman, Wood River, and Ron Webb, Sullivan.

Buchner Ahead at Bevo.

Joe Buchner, with a 643 total, was the early leader in the Bevo Holiday bowling sweepstakes. C. Lange was second with 638 and B. Larkin third was 636. The meet will continue today and next week-end.

OUTDOORS by James A. Kearns

Good Hunting for St. Louisans at Stuttgart.

A LONG, flat-bottomed boat moved slowly in the cold stillness before the dawn, crunching through a thin layer of ice in the shallow channel.

Five heavily-bundled hunters sat on frosted boards in the middle of the boat, while one guide handled the hard-working outboard motor and a second threw a light ahead, seeking logs and other obstacles.

Occasionally, as the boat pushed forward, a splash of water and the rustling of many wings were heard.

The sound was a welcome one to the hunters, who hoped the day would bring good duck shooting, even though Stuttgart, Ark., was proving a rather poor host to visiting sportsmen this season.

First of all, there had been little water in most reservoirs to attract the ducks. Then, after pumps had been obtained in a frantic effort to offset the drouth's effect, the migration of birds from the north slowed to a walk.

For once, the taking of limits of wildfowl was the exception rather than the rule in a district that boasts it is the duck capital of the country.

Would today bring a repetition of the kind of shooting generally found in Stuttgart this year? Or would it be reminiscent of other years, with skies full of ducks and blinds full of happy hunters?

These were the questions the five men in the boat asked themselves during the long ride lighted by a bright, star-filled winter's sky which made upright gun barrels gleam.

Finally, the boat stopped, and hunters and guides proceeded on foot to their destination, boots sloshing in the knee-deep water. The sticky mud on the bottom clung to the feet, slowing progress.

Logs and tree stumps, not blinds, were the shooting posts in this vast area of water and dead timber, which resembled to some degree a petrified forest.

Came the Dawn—and Ducks.

Shotguns were loaded and five men dispersed themselves to nearby positions to await shooting time, which soon came.

From the moment the dawn's gray light appeared, flights of ducks began passing overhead, most of them coming from an adjoining rest reservoir.

Time ticked to the magic minute of 30 minutes before sunrise. Suddenly, far off to the right, there was a blast of shotguns, the noise sweeping loud across the water. Two birds, speck-size in the distance, fell.

Within minutes, the five hunters from St. Louis had their chance. Three mallards, lured by the quacking of the guides, turned in flight and swung down toward the stone-still men.

Closer and closer they came. Two statues beneath the birds became alive, poked shotguns into the air and fired. One duck folded its wings and dropped into the water. Another wavered and then it, too, fell from the sky as the three other hunters swung into action.

The third mallard flew right through the barrage of pellets and turned back toward the rest reservoir.

Seconds later, a lone duck headed for the hunters, changed its mind and veered away—but too late. A shooter, leading nicely, placed his pellets so the bird ran headlong into them.

Four in One Flight Fall.

The peculiar stuttering call of Fred Smith, a 23-year-old guide who was on the best of speaking terms with the birds, enticed a large flight of mallards. Four plummeted as the hunters unloaded.

Two singles were added to the bag but a third, which by all odds should have been a dead duck, sped away very much alive to the delight of the two men who didn't fire.

Another flight approached close enough to lose three of its numbers. By this time, the birds were coming from all directions, and the shooters, sitting out in the open, had a hard time figuring out which birds to take.

A big red sun, showing over the horizon, saved the life of a large mallard that sailed right above the hunters' heads. The bird, approaching from the direction of the sun, was not seen until the last second.

Other ducks were not so fortunate, however, and by 8:30 o'clock in the morning the legal maximum of 20 birds had been taken.

Stuttgart still could produce a good hunt.

East St. Louis Picked to Keep Tourney Title

By John J. Archibald

There will be new faces, new schools, new colors, and maybe even some new cheers when the annual East St. Louis holiday basketball tournament opens tomorrow in Ainad Temple but the favorite will be familiar—who else but the host? Determined searches by East Side representatives have brought five teams to the meet for the first time—no mean feat in the tournament-ridden nearby Illinois area—but the quality is somewhat uncertain.

It is possible that among the seven teams that will challenge East St. Louis High for the trophies there will be a genuine powerhouse. They'll have to be somewhat extra special to keep the Flyers from taking their own championship for the fourth time in five years.

The newcomers to the event are Assumption, Dupo, Madison, St. Teresa of Decatur, and Schlarman of Danville. Two others made their initial appearance last year, Mattoon and Macomb.

That's the field. There has been no seeding because of the unknown quality of some of the entrants. Coach Pick Dehner's Flyers are regarded as most likely to succeed because that is what they have done in five regular games in one of the state's toughest basketball areas. Their victims were Jacksonville, Decatur, Granite City, Belleville, and Roxana.

In tomorrow's opening round, Assumption will oppose Mattoon at 7:30 p.m. and Macomb will meet Dupo at 9. Tuesday night's schedule is Madison vs. St. Teresa at 7:30 and Schlarman vs. East St. Louis at 9.

Semifinals will be held Wednesday night, and the championship game will start at 9 p.m. Thursday. There will be a consolation event as well.

Assumption has a smart but veteran team that is undefeated in six games. It is felt that Coach John O'Brien's squad has had only one serious test, however, and that was against Staunton last Tuesday, when Assumption won, 65-60. Reserves played a major portion of other games, and individual records therefore have little meaning.

St. Teresa gained local attention a few weeks ago when it defeated St. Louis U. High, 52-42, at Decatur. That, and an overtime loss to Beaumont, are the only losses incurred by the Junior Billikens. The St. Teresa team, therefore, will bear watching.

New Billiken Combination Likely to Oppose Indiana

By Robert Morrison

Santa Claus wasn't the only item making the Billiken smile yesterday. The grin was back on the Billiken face because it's possible a new player combination may bring considerable success in the remainder of this basketball season.

St. Louis U. Coach Eddie Hickey, back from the trip to the northwest on which the Bills lost two out of three, was looking toward tomorrow night's game with Indiana and following games with Kentucky and La Salle with more assurance.

The reason is that Grady Smith, whom he had extensively prepared for the spot, and Joe Todd, the likely sophomore, have established their right to starting roles at the guard positions for the Billikens.

"There's no question but what this development gives us a more formidable No. 1 outfit," Hickey said. "We are still burdened by the lack of height at center, but Jim McLaughlin is so far ahead of others at that spot, that we'll continue with him."

Record-Breaker.

Height at center is an appropriate subject at the moment because Indiana, in the Kiel Auditorium feature tomorrow night, presents six-foot-10 Don Schlundt, famed Big Ten record-breaker currently averaging 25.2 points per game.

Indiana, with a 2-4 record, has had its lumps as it attempts to reorganize following losses of key personnel from last year's conference championship team, but Schlundt is not one of the problems, of course.

Missouri, Southern Methodist, Cincinnati and Kansas State have defeated the Hoosiers of Branch McCracken, while their only victory of consequence was a close, 73-70, decision over Notre Dame.

In the unfolding picture of college basketball in the country, a few defeats do not necessarily condemn a team to oblivion, however. As Hickey remarked at the end of a week in which LaSalle, Utah, Missouri, Illinois, Wichita and others were set back: "You need only to follow the sports pages to see that basketball teams do get beat."

So Indiana's hopes are not beyond recall. Neither are those of the Billikens, who have a 4-3 record upon which they can build. What happens in the next few weeks could constitute a more critical phase of the season.

The notable shift in St. Louis starting personnel, evident in their games in the West, is reflected in the scoring statistics. Smith, who scored 14 points in the first four games of the season, made 20 in the next three. Todd went for nine and then 16.

Veteran guards Bob Dubinick and Bill Slattery fell off. Dubinick, who had 38 points in the first four games, had eight in the last three; Slattery went 28 and four.

Dick Boushka has moved to the head of the parade with 132 points for seven games, an 18.9 average. His career total is 1021 but he is not, of course, the first 1000-point scorer to wear the Blue and White. A fellow named Easy Ed Macauley had 1399 in four years, 1161 in his last three. With 19 regular-season games to go, Boushka is within reach of both marks.

ASK ME ANOTHER

By Harold Tuthill

"Recently you wrote about Ed Macauley playing for St. Louis U. against Washington U. two different baskeball seasons. How many points did Macauley score in each game and who were the Washington centers?"

BILLIKEN FAN.

As a freshman, Macauley scored 15 points in one game and 17 in another during the 1945-1946 season. The various opposing centers were Don Schultz, Mike Levinson and Ed Lansche.

In the 1946-1947 season Easy Ed scored 20 points in the first game and eight in the second. John Barker was the Bears' center.

"Can a baseball player who does not belong to the Yankees play on the Kansas City Blues?"—E. T. Berry, Waynesville, Mo.

Yes, if you mean, can a minor league farm club use a player not owned by the parent club? As an example, Alex Grammas was out on option to Kansas City by the Cincinnati Reds during the 1953 season. On Dec. 2, 1953, he was traded to the Cardinals for Pitcher Jack Crimian and a reported $100,000.

'54 PENSION LAW TO AID FORMER CONGRESSMEN

They Get More Now Because Expense Allowance Is Figured in Salary Base.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (AP) —Revisions Congress made this year in its pension system will be highly advantageous to some members who are giving up their seats through retirement or defeat.

The most important change—from the pensioner's point of view—deals with computation of the amount of pension. The effect is to increase pensions and allow a maximum annual pension of $11,256 instead of the former maximum of $9372.

The pension is based on the average salary of a member from 1946 until the year of retirement.

When the original pension, or retirement pay law, was enacted in 1946 members received $10,000 salary annually. This was increased to $12,500 the following year, plus a $2500 annual expense allowance.

The new law considers the expense allowance as part of salary.

Figuring in the expense allowance means higher average pay and consequently a higher pension when it is computed.

Further, there is a provision in the law limiting the maximum pension to 75 per cent of the salary received at the time of retirement. By calculating the $2500 annual expense allowance as pay, the annual salary of a Congress member becomes $15,000 for purposes of determining a pension. So the pension ceiling is raised.

For the maximum, 30 years of service is required. The rate is determined by multiplying the number of years of service by 2½ per cent. For instance, assume 10 years of service: 10 multiplied by 2½ is 25. The member of Congress is entitled to retirement pay amounting to 25 per cent of his average pay since 1946, assuming he is qualified in other respects.

There is nothing automatic about the retirement pay system. The whole plan is voluntary. Those who elect to come under it must pay 6 per cent of their annual salary into a retirement fund.

Under the new law, the 6 per cent applies both to a Congress member's $12,500 pay and $2500 expense allowance—the total of $15,000 treated as salary in figuring his pension.

The pension records are not open to public inspection. Officially, it is a secret which members of Congress have elected to get under the retirement system.

On the basis of the length of service requirement, only one Congress member who is not running next year will be eligible for the maximum pension. This is Representative Robert Crosser (Dem.), Ohio, now 80 years old, who was defeated this year after 38 years of House service.

It is known that Crosser is under the retirement system.

Many of the 50-odd other Congress members who will not be back next year undoubtedly are eligible also to start receiving monthly pension checks on Jan. 3—the date their congressional pay stops.

They must have reached the age of 62 if they want to get the maximum allowable for their length of service. The 1954 law did not change the retirement age, although it provided for reduced pensions at the age of 60 for members "separated" after 10 or more years of service.

Neither did the new law change the requirement that a member must have at least six years of service before becoming eligible for a pension. A member leaving Congress before having served six years may get a refund of his payments, plus interest.

The new law increases pensions in the lower brackets as well as the maximum.

In the case of a member retiring after eight years of service, the new law would mean an additional $132 annually—if he is 62 or older. He would get $2628 annually instead of the $2496 allowed under the old law. If under 62, he would have to wait until that age before receiving payments.

Of importance to present or future Congressmen with war records is another provision of the 1954 law. It allows credit toward pension for up to five years of military service, even though the service was rendered prior to the individual's service in Congress. The old law limited military credit to service which a member actually left his congressional office to perform.

Congressional pensioners receive none of the many allowances received by active members of Congress.

In addition to salary, active members receive the general $2500 expense allowance, 20 cents a mile travel allowance going to and coming from a session of Congress once each year, an estimated $24,000 annual clerical hire allotment, $800 annual stationery allowance, $125 annually for special delivery and air mail postage, free office space in the home district, 1800 minutes annually in long-distance telephone calls, and 12,000 words annually in telegrams or cablegrams.

HOLD-UP MAN WHO LOST HIS NERVE GIVES SELF UP

A transient ex-convict tried a holdup here yesterday, lost his nerve when resisted, then thought it over for about two hours and asked for directions to police headquarters.

He walked into the detective division, said he had tried to hold up a drug store at 1331 Franklin avenue and wanted to surrender so he would not get into any more trouble.

He gave his name as Raymond Harris, and said he was released from the Oklahoma state penitentiary Nov. 19 after serving a term for robbery. Mr. and Mrs. Morris' Snitzer, who operate the drug store, identified him as the one who demanded money and ran when Snitzer told him to get out.

ROBBER FLEES WHEN BANK TELLER ASKS WHAT TO DO

TORONTO, Dec. 25 (UP)—Mrs. Jean Rawle reported that a short, meek-looking man yesterday walked into the Huron & Erie Mortgage Co., where she is a teller, and handed her a note.

"This is a holdup . . . make it fast," the note said.

Mrs. Rawle looked at it for a moment and then turned to the teller beside her. "What'll I do?" she asked.

The holdup man fled.

6 GREEK CHILDREN JOINING FATHER IN U.S.

Flying to Janitor Who Saved 6 Years to Pay Their Fares.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP) — A Utah janitor's effort to get his family together in the United States paid off today with the arrival of six of his children by plane from Greece.

The children, ranging in age from 8 to 17, stopped in New York for five hours, then continued their flight to join their father, Michael Katsanevas, 65 years old, at Ogden, Utah.

A janitor at the naval supply depot at Clearfield, near Ogden, Katsanevas saved his money for the last six years to bring his wife and the six children to this country from the island of Crete.

Last October, his fellow workers added enough to the fund to provide transportation for a Christmas reunion.

The children won't make it until tomorrow, but Katsanevas plans to delay his Christmas celebration until then.

His wife was denied a visa because she had a stomach ailment, but United States officials in Athens said she would be given another physical checkup in several weeks. She may be given a visa at that time.

The six children today were taken to a hotel following their arrival. They should arrive in Salt Lake City tomorrow morning.

The youngsters are Leonidas, 17, Irene, 14, Stavroula, 8, Stulianos, 9, Areti, 11 and Nikolaos, 13. Only Leonidas and Irene remembered their father, who came to the United States in 1948 with three other children to establish a new home for his family.

Katsanevas left his home in Crete when he was 20 and became a railroad worker in the United States. After serving with the United States Army in World War I, he returned to his home in Greece, married and raised a family.

He came back to the United States with three of his sons after World War II.

PRESS COUNCIL TO CONTROL INDIA'S NEWSPAPERS FAVORED

NEW DELHI, Dec. 25 (AP) — Prime Minister Nehru's government has approved the basic idea of a press council to supervise the nation's newspapers. Establishment of such a body was recommended recently by an official commission.

The government's stand was made public this week in a parliamentary statement by Information Minister Balkrishna V. Keskar. He said the Cabinet favored the concept of a council "consisting predominately of representatives of the industry takng the responsbility for self-regulation."

The commission's report suggested what would amount to sweeping legislative control of almost all aspects of the newspaper industry — management, editorial content, circulation, wages, hours and other working conditions.

ARAB REFUGEE PROBLEMS CALLED CHIEFLY POLITICAL

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UP) — Mrs. Dorothy D. Houghton, top American official dealing with refugee problems, said today "it is difficult to help improve the conditions of Arab refugees in the Near East because the root of their problems is political."

"Most of them," she said in an interview, "hopeto return eventually to Palestine. Consequently they do not want to grow roots in the countries to which they have gone."

To date only 3000 of the 850,000 refugees in Jordan, Egypt, Lebanon and Syria have been resettled permanently.

FATHER, SON KILL TWO MEN TRYING TO HOLD UP STORE

CHICAGO, Dec. 25 (UP)—A father and son shot and killed two men who exchanged shots with them in a Christmas eve robbery attempt.

Peter Hoffman told police the robbers invaded a small south side store he owns. When the men drew revolvers, Hoffman said, he and his son Fred, 18 years old, grabbed automatic pistols and opened fire.

The men, before they fell, managed to fire a few shots, one of which struck the son in the hand.

PAIR MARRIED 60 YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Schmidt, 2804 January avenue, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary yesterday at an open house for friends and relatives at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Edward Fiedeler, 2837 Sulphur avenue.

The Schmidts, both 80 years old, were born in Germany, but met and married here. Schmidt is a former maintenance man at the Brown Shoe Co. warehouse, 1600 Washington avenue. He retired about 18 years ago. Besides Mrs. Fiedler the Schmidts have two sons, five grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

JAMES HILTON'S WILL GIVES INCOME TO FIRST WIFE, FATHER

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 25 (AP) —The late James Hilton left $500 a month for his first wife and the same amount for his father but did not mention his second wife, who divorced him in 1945, in a will filed for probate today. The British-born author died in Long Beach last Monday. His will provided that Mrs. Alice Hilton, his first wife, and the novelist's father, John Hilton of Essex, England, are to receive $500 a month each. It left $25,000 to Adele Barricklow, Hilton's secretary for many years.

Mrs. Galina Hilton was the author's second wife.

Man of the Year? Here's Boyle's Entry

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK (AP).

A STRANGER in a worn topcoat came up to me as I sat at my typewriter with a preoccupied air.

"Excuse me," he said, and as I looked up with a start, he added, grinning:

"Did I wake you?"

ALL ON $72.50 A WEEK.

"Certainly not," I said indignantly. "I wasn't sleeping. I was thinking."

"What about?"

"Well," I replied, half-annoyed. "I was about to pick my man-of-the-year candidate. It is one of the chores of columning. Every columnist who wants to get ahead in the world has to do four things during the year—praise motherhood, alert the public to the menace of poison ivy, discover a new sure cure for hay fever, and pick the man of the year."

"Who are you going to pick?" he asked.

"I'm in a quandary," I said. "I'm torn between Pope Pius, President Eisenhower, Winston Churchill, Pierre Mendes-France and Carl Sandburg."

"I knew it!" exclaimed the stranger, taking off his battered hat and throwing it on the floor. "You're just like all the others!"

"What do you mean—I'm like all the others?"

"You're like all the other typewriter jockeys when they get around to picking the man of the year. You always play it safe and give the nod to somebody with a headline name."

● IS THERE anything wrong with the men I mentioned?"

"Not a thing," he said. "They're all fine men. But they're already famous. They don't need any more honors. Why not be different? Why don't you pick a dark horse for man of the year?"

"Well," I said, thinking that was a mixed metaphor if I'd ever heard one. "Who you got in mind, mister?"

"Me!" he said defiantly. "And don't laugh."

"I'm not laughing," I told him, looking around for help. "But would you mind telling me why I should name you man of the year?"

"Don't think I'm not important," he said. "I'm 45 years old, I got two kids in school, I got a wife. I also got a 3-year-old car that's paid for, and a house that isn't, but it will be. I got a television set, a refrigerator, a radio, a washing machine, and $7500 worth of insurance."

"Well, bully for you."

"Maybe that don't impress you," he said. "But I keep all those things together on $72.50 a week, and I give money to the church and the Red Cross and the Community Chest."

● WELL, BULLY again for you, but—"

"But nothing!" he stormed. "I see you still don't know me. Listen, you pavement pundit, if it weren't for me every store in America would close its doors, every wheel in every factory would stop turning—and there wouldn't be any elections, nor no baseball games either, I can tell you. Now do you know who I am?"

"Your face is familiar, but I'm sorry I don't quite recall your name."

"You don't?" he said, exasperated. "Well, you should. You and the other ivory domes gave it to me. I'm the guy you're always patting on the back in print and calling the common man, the average American, and—oh, yes—the little fellow. Well, once in my life I want to be the big fellow."

"By golly, you are!" I told him, putting another sheet in the typewriter. "Everything you say is true, and if it makes you any happier—you're tops on my list, the real man of the year."

● HE SHOOK HANDS, started to leave, then turned back uncertainly.

"Anything wrong?" I asked.

"No," he said. "I was just thinking about the little lady. Anything good I done was all on account of her, and I wouldn't feel right getting this honor if—"

"How about us making her the woman of the year?" I said.

"Now you're really talking—gee, will she be surprised." He left smiling, but as he reached the door he turned and said, "You wouldn't kid me, would you? I really won't believe it until I see it in the newspaper."

Well, here it is in the newspaper: To Mr. and Mrs. Average American, man and woman of the year 1954—and twin bulwarks of a free world in the terrible and wonderful twentieth century.

'Big Rich' in Texas

All It Takes to Be So Classified Down in Lone Star State is some $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 in Real, Not Stage Money—Mere Millionaires Come a Dime a Dozen Where Oil Wells Spout Riches from Ground

By Dickson Terry
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

FIRST OF A SERIES.

HOUSTON, Tex.

THERE are said to be a thousand millionaires here in Houston, but that's just a convenient figure for bragging purposes and like nearly everything else in Texas, somewhat exaggerated. As a matter of fact, we were told by a Houston newspaper man who investigated the matter, there are only 791.

Not all of these, of course, are oil millionaires. Some of them, like Jesse Jones, who owns a large share of downtown Houston, made it in real estate and other avenues. And some are just small-timers who only have from $1,000,000 to $15,000,000 and to whom nobody pays much heed. In fact, they tell you about one man down here who died and left $25,000,000 and made the front page only because everybody expected him to leave a lot more.

They distinguish here between the merely rich and what they call the Big Rich, who got that way from Texas oil. Just where the dividing line comes is a matter of debate, but most people seem to agree that being Big Rich starts at about $40,000,000 to $50,000,000.

The Texas oil millionaire has been around for some time now. In fact, ever since Spindletop, a word which makes most Texas oil men take off their hats and face Beaumont, Spindletop was the first well brought in at the big Beaumont field at the turn of the century, and the well which started it all.

Only in recent years, however, has the Texas oil millionaire been projected on the American scene as one of the standard figures of fact and fiction in our national life, along with the Yankee horse trader, the Western pioneer, the robber baron and all the others. So much has been written about him in the last few years that he, and the stories built around him, have become part of the folklore. Like all folklore, there is a lot of pure hyperbole therein, but there is also enough truth to make it good in the telling.

One of the favorite stories down here concerns the extremely near-sighted oil millionaire who had the windshield of his Cadillac ground to his eyeglass prescription. Ridiculous, yes, but then we come up against another story, which Houstonians swear is true. It concerns the oil millionaire who sent his Cadillac to Europe to have a custom-built, foreign body put on it. He sent word along to just throw the old body away.

It's no wonder they joke about how, when the ash tray of a Texas oil man"s Cadillac gets full he doesn't empty it — he just trades the car in on a new one. At last count there were approximately 5000 air-conditioned Cadillacs on the streets of Houston, and I saw one second-hand car lot which dealt only in Cadillacs. Hundreds of them.

AND it's also true that an oil man and a promoter met in the lobby of the Rice hotel here one afternoon and made a $330,000,000 deal in 20 minutes. As a result of these and dozens of similar stories, not to mention magazine articles and novels, like Edna Ferber's "Giant" and George Fuermann's "Land of the Big Rich," the Texas oil tycoon has been evolving into a Bunyanesque figure whose features are not yet very clearly drawn, but whose characteristics any American child would recognize. Not the least among them is supposed to be a gauche and somewhat childlike wonderment at being in possession of vast sums of money which he doesn't quite know how to spend; and a tendency to look upon Texas and everything connected therewith as slightly detached from the rest of the country and not subject to the general rules pertaining thereto.

This makes a lot of people, including some Texas oil millionaires, sad. Because, with a few notable exceptions, real-life oil tycoons do not adhere very closely to the picture and about the only thing they really have in common is a lot of money.

For instance, three more widely divergent types would be hard to find than the three most widely publicized oil men in Houston — Glenn McCarthy, Hugh Roy Cullen and Jim West.

PERHAPS no man has done more to focus attention on the Texas oil man than McCarthy, known as the King of the Wildcatters. He is the sort of man people usually think of when Texas and oil and wild spending are mentioned. He made the headlines for years, sometimes because of new oil discoveries, sometimes because of the way he spent money and sometimes because of brawls, both barroom and courtroom.

But he has color and he is a living legend in Texas. Time magazine once described him this way: "He looks like nothing so much as a Hollywood version of a Mississippi river gambler, a moody and monolithic man with a dark, Civil War mustache, a cold acquisitive eye and a brawler's shoulder-swinging walk."

He started with nothing, made two huge fortunes, and is now back among the poor rich with, they say, less than $15,000,000 to his name. He had made and lost a fortune when he was 26. He worked at a lot of jobs when young, but made his first real money during the depression when he talked an oil company into building a filling station on a vacant lot he had been checking, and letting him run it. He worked hard, day and night, and by the end of the year had a second station. Between the two stations he brought his profits up to more than $1000 a month. This gave him a little money to start speculating in oil. He started out by trading and dealing in leases. His first drilling operation, in 1933, was a failure. But he moved on to another lease and brought in a small producer.

On the strength of this he sold his filling stations, hocked everything he had and rushed into other drilling operations, which failed. All he had left was a small lease near a field which was producing. He put together a drilling rig from odds and ends and wangled the rental of drill pipe on credit. The climax of it all was like a Hollywood movie. He and his workmen were holding off a deputy sheriff who had come to get the pipe. The ancient rig kept breaking down. McCarthy and two workmen barely escaped death when a plank broke beneath them on the derrick. After working all one night they brought the well in, a gusher.

McCarthy got rich, wasn't satisfied, over-expanded and wound up some $4,000,000 in debt. But he started all over again. He got a syndicate to back him, drilled in what was considered an extremely unlikely spot, and hit again. One success led to another, and by the time he was 40 years old he was president and owner of 18 corporations, valued at more than $100,000,000. Then over-expansion got him again.

The fabulous Shamrock Hotel, which cost him $21,000,000 to build, was taken over by the Equitable Life Insurance Co. (which, with Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. had loaned McCarthy $55,000,000 on his holdings) and has now been sold to Conrad Hilton. Gone is a $15,000,000 chemical plant, a string of newspapers and many other things in which McCarthy invested. He still owns oil wells in Texas, California and Wyoming, and he has a lot of real estate, a radio station, and other holdings.

But his biggest asset today, other oil men say, is a 970,000-acre oil concession in Bolivia, which he is now working. McCarthy, Texas oil men say, will make it again. You can't keep him down.

What has been McCarthy's contribution to Houston? Well, a lot of people think it is considerable, even if it is a little hard to define. There is the Shamrock Hotel, of course, which is nationally famous and which stands for both Houston and Glenn McCarthy.

"But I think the main thing Glenn did for Houston," said an oil man who knows him well, "is that he made it one of the cosmopolitan cities of the world, right along with New York, Hollywood, London and Paris. He gave Houston something we never had before. I guess you could call it Cafe Society."

Cafe Society is a term you'd probably have to explain to Hugh Roy Cullen. Not because he is ignorant, but because it's another world to him. Cullen is a 72-year-old man with several hundred million dollars and a lot of strong opinions on how just about everything, including the country, should be run. Houstonians doubt if Cullen has ever been inside the Shamrock.

Cullen and his wife live quietly in his beautiful limestone mansion in town (staffed by 14 servants), or at their 14,000-acre ranch in the country, where they go to bed early and get up early, fix their own breakfast and ride out to look at the herd of 2000 deer on the place.

"My wife and I are selfish," Cullen once explained. "We want to see our money spent during our lifetime so we may derive great pleasure from it." So the Cullens have given away almost $200,000,000 in cash and oil reserves.

The people of Houston think highly of Cullen. Recently a 360-page biography of him came off the presses. At a luncheon in honor of the occasion, Mayor Roy Hofheinz said: "Houston is proud to have been the place where the touch of the hand of Cullen's has been permitted to fall by Almighty God." It's only in Texas you could find oratory like that, too.

CULLEN was 40 years old before he made any money. He went to school only as far as the third grade, quitting to go to work. In 1911, he moved from San Antonio to Houston, and got a job selling real estate. When he saved a little money, he promoted his first well. It was a dry hole. He kept on promoting, and in 1921 brought in a small producing well. The tide in his career was turned when he formed a partnership with the late J. M. West. West was already prospering, having a number of leases and some production. West and Cullen brought in the Thompson field, one of the biggest, and sold their interest in it to the Humble Oil Co. for $20,000,000. That was the beginning of the big money for Cullen. Cullen owns two Cadillacs and one Oldsmobile, which in Big Rich circles in Texas is extremely modest.

Jim West, son of the late J. M. West, represents still another type of Texas tycoon.

West, who looks like a truculent cherub in the face, and who usually dresses like a kid playing Texas Ranger, has an estimated $100,000,000. He has 11 Cadillacs and enough Oldsmobiles, Fords, Buicks and Chryslers to bring his total fleet to 30 which he keeps in a private garage he maintains downtown, staffed with the required number of mechanics, body men and porters.

Also on the garage staff are radio technicians, because each of his cars has four telephone receivers hanging from the instrument panel. One is tuned in on the Houston police wave length, another to the sheriff's office and the other two to a couple of wave lengths of West's own, operating from his home and his ranch. He has two big airplanes, equipped the same way.

He is sometimes known as "Silver Dollar West" because he loves to carry around a huge supply of silver dollars in pockets specially built into his pants. He tosses the dollars to bellboys, filling station attendants, porters or just kids in the street, because he loves to stand and watch them scramble for the silver.

His greatest pleasure, however, is playing cops and robbers. In addition to the telephonic communication in his cars, he has massive electronic equipment by his bed, and he is always in touch with anything going on in or near Houston in the way of crime. The police and public have long since resigned themselves to the fact that Jim West is usually the first at the scene of any crime, day or night.

He has 24 telephones in the main house and 12 more in the garage, and he has been described as living in a constant faint murmur of voices, because he never turns the stuff off.

When West had a fuss with the water company he dug artesian wells and built his own water system. When he had a fuss with the light company he put in his own power plant. There are reports that he is none too pleased with the way the telephone company is behaving, but he's stymied there.

West's chief assets today include some 600,000 acres of oil land and the pools of oil under it, which he inherited from his daddy. Like all members of the Big Rich, his avocation is ranching, and he has thousands of head of cattle on his thousands of acres of ranch land.

Houstonians raise their eyebrows at Jim West. They hope that if anybody is taken as the prototype of the Texas oil tycoon, it won't be West. They direct your gaze instead to Jim Abercrombie, or Bob Smith, or even Jim West's brother Westley, who is known around Houston as "the quiet one," even though he gives glittering soirees and flies in big name performers just to entertain friends on Saturday nights. He just seems quiet in comparison to Jim.

WHEN I said that the only thing most Texas oil men really have in common is a lot of money, I should have mentioned another quality which made it possible for them to make the money, and that's a combination of courage and determination which is usually referred to as guts. You have to have a lot of it to be a successful wildcatter, and all these men are successful wildcatters.

The term wildcatter really means an independent operator. And an independent operator is one who is not connected with any major oil company. They'll tell you down here that no major company ever discovered any oil. That isn't quite true. But it is true that 85 per cent of new oil is found by the wildcatters, and for good, economic reasons which suit everybody, including the oil companies.

A wildcatter starts with a lease on some land. He may or may not have the services of a geologist. Most of them do nowadays, but in the old days they quite often proceeded on nothing but hope. Usually the wildcatter makes what is known as a "dry hole deal" with a major company. If the company is interested in finding out if there is oil on the property, it agrees to give cash for drilling. But they pay only if it is a dry hole. If there is oil there, the wildcatter has his acreage, which becomes extremely valuable, and he has his share in the well he brought in. So he doesn't need the digging money. If it's a dry hole, the oil company pays as per agreement, and the wildcatter starts out trying to put another deal together.

For every well that comes in, there are a dozen dry holes, and for every man who has made millions, there are untold numbers who died broke. In the careers of those who made it, however, you find the same story—courage and determination.

JIM ABERCROMBIE, one of Houston's most modest citizens, sold only a part of his holdings a few years ago for $50,000,000. He was one of nine children, all of whom went to work early. His father had a small dairy farm and his cows grazed on land which is now industrial Houston. Jim got his start in oil as a roughneck in the oil fields. He worked all over Texas, in various oil field jobs, and learned just about everything there was to know about the business. In 1920 he invested in a used drilling rig and went into the drilling business. But business was slow, and he almost lost his mortgaged rig. Friends loaned him enough to keep him going. He didn't make a lot as a driller—his machine was always getting out of whack and repairs kept him strapped—so he decided to become a wildcatter. For several years he hung on, operating on a shoestring, but finally he brought in a well on a small lease in the Columbia Field. By the middle 1930s he was a millionaire, and as more of his holdings began to produce he moved into the multi-millionaire class.

But the only time you hear much about Abercrombie is when he stages his annual Pin Oaks Horse Show, which is for charity. He built the magnificent Pin Oaks stables on the outskirts of Houston, and he stages the annual show which attracts the nation's best show horses to compete for some $50,000 in prizes. All the proceeds go to the Texas Children's Hospital, amounting to about $75,000 a year.

There is some debate among Houstonians as to whether Bob Smith may be the richest man in Texas. Richer, even, than Haroldson Lafayette Hunt or Sid Richardson who live in Dallas and Forth Worth and who have been generally accepted for some time as the two richest oil men in Texas.

SMITH is big, square-jawed and steely-eyed, and he came by his inclination to gamble with fortune honestly. His father before him spent most of his life trying to find gold. Smith, like Abercrombie, started work in the oil fields as a roughneck. He lost half a dozen jobs because he couldn't stand to take orders. One cold night, while working as a salesman for an oil well supply company he sat in a hotel lobby and listened to a homesick driller bemoan his fate. The driller was so sick of it all, he said, he would sell his rig for $25,000 and head back east if he could find a buyer. The next morning Smith asked him if he meant it. He did. Smith went to the president of the bank at Tonkawa, Okla., where he was living at the time, and asked for $25,000 to buy the rig. The banker looked at him with a cold eye and said, "You haven't even got a dime's worth of security. Why come to me?"

Smith said, "Because you're the only man in town that's got $25,000." The banker let him have the money for 30 days. During that time Smith got all his friends to invest with him, and he met the deadline.

He set himself up as a driller, and after a few years he owned the drilling rig outright. After a few more years he had enough to start wildcatting. He invested in oil properties and in time he hit. He made a fortune and then started drilling dry holes and lost every dime of it. That's when some men give up.

But Smith started all over again, finally hit another well, and another and is now generally believed to be worth several hundred million dollars.

Nowadays he devotes himself to good works. He's a dollar-a-year head of Houston Civil Defense, helps out with the Variety Boys' Club and has received awards for his work for the National Conference of Christians and Jews and from the Mexican government for his services in the cause of Mexican-American relations in Houston.

People wonder how these multi-millionaires, in this day of high taxes, can have and hold so much wealth, wealth beyond even the threat of future impoverishment, providing they don't goof it. The number one secret is a gimmick known as the depletion allowance, a tax exemption which is the subject of a great deal of heated debate. It has been denounced as a tax dodge, but everyone connected with the oil business declares that without the depletion allowance the development of new oil lands would come to a stop, and the wildcatter would cease to exist.

Tomorrow: How the depletion allowance works.

Wind Has Bite to It

Gray Days, Swirls Of Snow on Farm

By Leonard Hall

IT is good to be home again after weeks on the road—and settling down once more to the winter routine of the farm. For now winter seems to have started in earnest, with a long succession of gray and cloudy days, occasional swirls of snow and a wind with a bite to it, morning temperatures standing at 18 degrees, and the ground frozen hard enough until noon or after to hold up a tractor in the fields. At this season weather governs the round of the day's work, except for morning and evening care of the livestock, and plans must often be made on the spur of the moment. But as any farmer knows, there's always so much waiting to be done that this is seldom a handicap.

We hardly belong to the old school of farmers who used to come in for breakfast at 5 a.m., after getting the cows milked, the chickens fed and the teams harnessed for the day, and then worry because "mornin' was half over and nothin' done yet." By the time the coffee boils, in fact, there is generally enough daylight so I can make out dimly the shapes of the cattle bedded down in the barn-lot and see their breath rising like smoke into the air. Then the light strengthens and I note that the first chickadees and nuthatches and titmice are coming in for their breakfast of suet, scratch feed and peanut butter.

Well before this, however, we've let Veronica in at the front door. Just outside our bedroom window is a post which once held a bird feeder and long before daylight the old cat comes from her bed in the granary to perch atop this post and wait for us to wake up. Mike and Tiger sleep on the side porch, which is glassed in but has a small door covered with a curtain where they can go in and out. At the first sign of a light they start knocking at the dining-room door, but there's still some argument going on in the Hall family as to whether they can come into the house during the day, or not until we light the fire in the living room just before supper. So far, it seems to be a stand-off.

● ALONG ABOUT 7 A.M. as we're finishing breakfast, Matt arrives and we pour another cup of coffee while we make plans for the day. One of the neighbors has been over with his chain saw, cutting down some big trees which died during the drouth—and cutting up some others which blew down during last summer's cyclonic winds, so there is wood to be split and hauled in as well as poles and limbs to cut into stove wood with the tractor saw. If the weather is warm and the ground thawed, a half-dozen fencing jobs are waiting. Any warm spell that's long enough to let the ground dry out will find us making the oats ground ready. And there is always manure to haul and machinery to check and repair for the crop season that lies ahead.

Winter is the time of year that tests the skill of the livestock farmer. But when it comes to taking the beef herd through the cold weather in good shape, we've found that more than half the battle is won during the previous summer and autumn. Cattle that go into the winter thin will eat a lot of feed and come out in spring thinner still. When they start out the feeding season fat and in top condition, the same amount of feed will take them through with no loss in weight whatever. More than that, the well-fed herd produces a 100 per cent calf crop, breeds back promptly, gives plenty of milk to raise a big calf and is generally thriftier the year round. Finally, though it takes a little better pasture during the grazing season and a little more hay during cold weather, there's a lot more satisfaction in handling a well-conditioned herd.

● BEEF CATTLE are remarkably hardy animals, especially when well fed, so that though the feeding aisles in our big barn are open, you'll seldom see a cow spending the night there. Right now we're feeding hay out on the ground in the fields and that is where the herd beds down at night, sometimes moving into the cedar thickets if the wind blows hard. The cows bring their calves outdoors, even in midwinter. We bring them in to a stall in the barn for three or four days, then turn the youngsters out with their mothers and they thrive on this treatment.

It is difficult to believe that with this column, we're rounding out another year at Possum Trot. By no means has it been an easy year—what with drouth and short crops and prices hovering at or below our production costs. Yet like farmers everywhere since the beginning of time, we're filled with great expectations for the season that lies ahead.

● THE RAINS WILL COME AGAIN and crops will grow. The herds will increase and we'll find good buyers. The business of farming is never an easy one, and yet it has compensations which are found in few other callings. These come in working with the land and with our animals—in seeking ways to co-operate with nature instead of subverting her— in preparing the ground, planting the seed and harvesting the crop. It is a good life and one which we know, as the New Year awaits its entrance, that we wouldn't trade for any other.

Last Man to Get a TV Set?

He Says It Was Tough Fight, but He Lost to Pressure From All Sides

THE NEIGHBORS REGARDED MY FAMILY WITH SYMPATHY AND ME WITH LOATHING. ONE AFTERNOON A SMALL DOG BIT ME IN THE ACHILLES TENDON, BUT IT MAY HAVE BEEN A COINCIDENCE.

By John Keasler

IT WAS a a tough fight, but I lost. The man will be installing the TV set at my house any day now. Not over my dead body, either, which is the way I used to say this event would have to come about.

It's simply that no husband and father can successfully hold out against television once his family makes it clear he has to buy a television set. I say it with the weary resignation of a last-ditch fighter against a 21-inch screen in front of the bookcase and against detergent commercials during the siesta period.

"Television?" I recall saying scornfully in my naive youth. "Bah! Not in this house!"

"Yes, dear," my wife said. That should have warned me right there. Immediately she and the children fell into invasion position to set up the beachhead while I was busy putting my foot down firmly, much in the manner of a large but not overly bright fly stomping his foot decisively in the flypaper.

In the early years there was a series of television parties at the homes of friends. "My," my wife would say subtly. "It seems that everybody has television but us."

SO it did. Television aerials were being installed all over the neighborhood and the quiet, suburban air was filled with the lulling thuds of husbands falling from the eaves. I held firm. No television.

I even launched a crushingly ineffective counter-attack. For a while there—in those first years—I would come home triumphantly waving newspaper clippings about some learned group which had decided constant staring at a TV screen would produce intermittent liver spots before the eyes, or television gap-jaw.

Then, for some reason—I guess their wives got to them—the members of these learned groups suddenly went pro-television and stated it was the greatest thing since scenery, for the optic orbs. I changed my defense to less technical grounds; spoke of fundamental things, spoke of our forebears.

"LOOK at the pioneers," I kept commanding. "Where would we be if our ancestors had sat up all night watching television? What about the home and hearthside? Must our children have their entertainment packaged and handed to them? One hundred well-chosen words on self-reliance. Suppose as kids John Paul Jones and George Washington had—by the way, where are the kids? I haven't seen them since Sunday."

"Next door watching Sergeant Ozone on Saturn," my wife replied icily. "Poor little things, they wonder why they can't have a TV set like other children."

I exploded. "When I was their age I was . . ."

". . . Making erector sets out of old spools and walking three miles to school through blizzards," she said helpfully. "Constructing bean-bags as you journeyed."

"Well, I wasn't watching some non-com getting bloody over Saturn," I riposted. "Not when I should have been reading fairy tales or learning Mother Goose."

"You were reading the Mark of Zorro behind the poolroom," my helpmeet said. "Don't hand me that stuff."

"No television," I said. "Someday you will thank me for my noble stand."

She didn't though. The impasse continued. My neighborhood reached the saturation point in television. Only my own roof was bare.

For me, life narrowed down to being shot with ray guns, being eyed with deep hurt by my family, being considered a stubborn skinflint by friends. I was left alone in an alien world.

There were a few overtures from some intellectuals. They decided that because I didn't have a television set I must be an intellectual also. They even invited me to a couple of parties. All the men looked cosmic and the women wore ballerina skirts and sandals but nobody did any folk dances. However, it developed that I didn't like to sit cross-legged on the floor and listen to Dixieland, so I was promptly ostracized.

Well, the Jones were trading for a set with a bigger screen and the Smiths were buying a second set for upstairs. My poor little things were next door watching Sergeant Ozone on Mercury. The neighbors regarded my family with sympathy and me with loathing. One afternoon a small dog bit me in the Achilles tendon, but it may have been coincidence.

Once I got the dog off, I stood firm and I said, "No television in this house."

TO my four-year-old I said, "Hello, Kathleen, Honey. Daddy brought you a nice picture book."

"Dum de dum dum!" she growled. "Dummmmmm." That's the theme of a half-hour program, in which detectives with taps on their heels give frequent time and temperature reports from Los Angeles. It was all I could get out of Kathleen for weeks. She spends a lot of time at the neighbors.

Mark, my three-year-old, knows several lovely little paeans to headache remedies, and when the acoustics are right my children can deliver a certain dogfood commercial in a manner calculated to stir the listener deeply.

"No television!" I said. "Why aren't they singing 'London Bridge?'"

This is something I don't understand, matter of fact—how is it that kids who have a terrible mental battle trying to remember which comes first, one or two, can memorize a 10-line singing commercial instantaneously?

It may be that educators are missing a bet here. I don't know, really, how practical it would be for teachers to sing American History or put the multiplication tables in a rousing little roundelay but all the evidence I hear—incessantly—would indicate the results might be astounding. Anyhow, you get wild thoughts like that when fighting the no-television battle.

THE only breakfast cereal I am permitted to buy crackles like high noon in the Argonne. Then my children sing the little commercial. Children these days have active little minds.

"I don't care if every mortal in town gets six television sets," I screamed mildly one evening. "I will not be coerced into—"

"Drop dead," said my three-year-old.

"What? Where did he learn that?" I demanded.

"He's disintegrating you with his ray gun," my wife said, with what I considered undue satisfaction. "Do drop dead."

"Oh," I said. "Well, why—never mind."

I caught myself barely in time. This was just the other day. I knew the end had come. I knew I was a beaten man.

I had almost asked why my children weren't next door watching television, where they belonged. . . .

So the man will bring the set in a few days. I'm looking on the bright side. Now I will know what the rest of the world is talking about. For years I have gone around not Meeting the Press; not Loving Lucy and thinking Clara Belle was a cow; not knowing from day to day when Ozone was going to make staff sergeant.

There has to be a bright side. Doesn't there? Doesn't there? Somebody say something.

"Whappety," says Mark, my 3-year-old. "Oo is dead."

And so I am.

Modern Marriage

Flourishing Institution

By Dr. Paul Popenoe

MARRIAGE has been flourishing for a long time, and, of course, that is a surprising fact to some of us marriage counselors, who are amazed that it could prosper without our advice. Mrs. I., who has been divorced three times and therefore knows a lot about it (so she says), is particularly sarcastic in writing some comments on this column. She concludes by inquiring, "What did the poor world do before you came along to direct it?"

Well, it was certainly laboring under a handicap, Mrs. I., but there were other advisers who did the best they could for the world. It's interesting to take a look at their suggestions once in a while. Here's a book, issued in England well nigh a century ago, called "How to Be Happy Though Married." It enjoyed a long popularity, and readers today can get a picture of mid-Victorian marriage.

It is often alleged that the husband in those days was the lord and master and the wife merely a complaisant or long-suffering slave. The author of this book, E. J. Hardy, uses a more realistic figure of speech. The wife, he says, is the little tug-boat, active, powerful, though scarcely seen, that directs and controls the refractory movements of the great ship—that is, the husband. Sounds plausible, even today, doesn't it?

YOUNG GIRLS were sometimes married off, by their parents, to wealthy old men. It's a terrible fate, isn't it? And as a marriage counselor I have had to deal with a good many such cases during the past few years.

Mr. Hardy tells of a father in those dark ages who said to his daughter, "What do you think of a fine, intelligent husband of 50?"

"I think two of 25 would be better, papa." she replied.

The pursuit of the male is realistically taken for granted ("girls are quite justified in trying all ways, consistent with modesty and self-respect, to get husbands"), but they are warned that the males whom they acquire will have plenty of infirmities, not least heir apparent tongue-tied inability to give their wives a word of praise and encouragement now and then. I get the same complaints nowadays from women readers of this column!

Girls were seeking husbands in those days, but men were seeking wives, too, and we read their advertisements.

FOR EXAMPLE:

"Wanted by a Young Gentleman just beginning housekeeping, a Lady between 18 and 25 years of age, with a good Education, and a Fortune not less than 5000 Pounds: Sound Wind and Limb, Five Feet Four Inches without her shoes; Not Fat, nor yet too lean; good Set of Teeth; No Pride of affectation; Not very Talkative nor one that is deemed a Scold; but of a Spirit to resent an Affront; of a Charitable Disposition; Not overfond of Dress, though always Decent and Clean; that will entertain her Husband's Friends with Affability and Cheerfulness, and Prefer his Company to Publick Diversions and gadding about; one who can keep his Secrets, that he may open his heart to her without reserve on all occasions; that can extend Domestic Expenses with Economy, as Prosperity advances, without Ostentation; and retrench them with Cheerfulness, if occasion sould require. Any Lady disposed to Matrimony, answering this description, is desired to direct for Y.Z., at the Baptist's Head Coffee House, Aldermanbury."

Do I hear any offers?

Answers to Questions.

Q. When both husband and wife work all day, should he expect her to do all the housekeeping—including washing and ironing?

A. Of course not. There should be a fair division of labor. They will be wise if they plan to take a good many meals out and simplify housekeeping to the limit.

Secrets of Charm

Adding Luster to Hair

THERE are many coloring products for the hair, and they serve many purposes. You can be a little, or a lot more blonde or Titian or brunette. You can have permanent color in the time it takes to shampoo your hair at home, or have it done by a beautician. You can conceal a few gray strands with a crayon, or have temporary streaks and tips of glittering silver or gold.

This last idea is a good one for the midwinter parties, to give glamorous accent to wour hairdo. If you prefer not to attempt the highlighting yourself, go to a salon.

A PROCESS used by many hairdressers is that of putting a lightening mixture in a plastic vial, winding a strand of hair around its rubber stopper, and sealing the vial. By the time your hair is dry, scattered tips or a single lock are tinsled.

Many models perform the gold-or-silver trick at home, by painting or spraying on temporary color. Don't use a permanent dye until you have first tried one that rinses out with your shampoo. Part your hair evenly around the strand to be colored. Comb that strand carefully, so it is completely smooth and there are no loose ends to subtract from the sharply defined streak.

Use the slotted shield that comes with your color product, or make your own out of cardboard. A good size is approximately 3x4 inches with a slit in the middle about one and one-fourth inches long. Bring the strand through this slot, and press the cardboard close to your head. Apply color as near the roots as possible, and retouch. If necessary, after removing the card. It's easy to apply glitter, this way, exactly where you want it.

IF YOU ARE CONSIDERING an all-over tint or rinse, remember that a rinse is easier to apply. It simply coats your hair with color and washes out with each shampoo. A tint actually penetrates the hair, coloring it permanently.

When you adopt a color not your own, don't go to extremes. A shade just lighter or darker than your natural hair color is best, because it will be most complimentary to your skin.

Somewhere (in Kirkwood) a Voice Is Calling . . .

By Jack Rice

RAISING children, the most second-guessed and underrated sport of all times, has a new complication. It is the Mexican burro, a triumph of imported-burro commerce over native U. S. horse sense, and there is a man in Kirkwood who doesn't know all about it yet but is learning the whole, awful truth day by day and bray by bray.

The man owns a burro and a three-year old daughter. The burro and daughter are under the impression they own the man, and are busy running down the claim and the father.

The man should be nameless, and will be if charity triumphs over good reporting, because there may be someone in the ranch-type mortgage development surrounding him who doesn't yet know what is causing all the racket.

IT WAS a quiet neighborhood, disturbed only occasionally by an outraged mother spotting her son giving away both weight and age to that horrid Jones boy in a non-title bout over a Scout knife, or the outraged yelp of the man whose windows had been sacrificed again to some duffer's slice off the Greenbriar golf course.

The man and his in-laws live on six acres, amicably and in two houses. They barter hospitality freely, meaning that the son-in-law never hesitates to show in the parents' kitchen when he discovers his own ice box suddenly is bare of beer.

On one such occasion of sudden drouth he migrated to the in-laws' oasis, absently taking with him a magazine he had been reading. Napoleon ate a green apple before the battle of Waterloo, and on such fragile hinges do great events swing.

The father-in-law picked up the magazine, and in the back of it, among the Bikini bathing suit and the adult movie ads, read of Mexican burros, miniature size and offered as a steal from Laredo, Tex., for some $65, plus express charges, and including hay.

"Susie," said the father-in-law, referring to his granddaughter, "would like one of these."

"A boy burro or a girl burro?" asked his wife.

Four years ago, after a close observation and a seance with woman's intuition, she gave haven to a male cat. Now feeding 29 cats 15 pounds of horsemeat a week, she is on the brink of admitting the original cat was not a male.

"A male burro," said her husband, a man of pretty good intuition himself.

"I don't know . . .," said Susie's father.

"Have another beer," said his father-in-law.

Three days later, establishing an intercollegiate record for Railway Express, a bemused truck driver asked where this four-legged wetback he had on board was to be let free.

The burro was directed to an outbuilding that once had been home base for some sheep, since departed in a blaze of economic triumph. A farmer down the road accepted them for $5 cheaper than anyone else had offered for rescuing the family from sheep that ignored the grass, nibbled the ivy, and insisted the bricked veranda could be fertilized.

SUSIE'S FATHER had one last out. Maybe the light of his life would show a phobia, or at least a revulsion, or possibly a mild allergy to burros. She already had shown a marked athletic talent. Bipp Fogertey, the Greenbriar golf pro, had introduced Susie to golf clubs on her third birthday.

She went left-handed with the putter, and from a right-handed stance with a midget wood got a typical woman's drive, short and straight down the middle. At a birthday party she had brought down three five-year old boys in succession with crisp tackles and her father had bright visions of the first girl tackle to play for Missouri in the Orange Bowl, Oklahoma and Maryland permitting.

"SCAMPY!" yelped Susie, planting a kiss and a name on the burro simultaneously, before they even had been properly introduced. That, at least, settled Susie's father's fears that she would be a Harvard man.

Through fate, a matter of previous dinner invitation and uncertain burro delivery, a newspaperman was present. Like every other man, Susie's father is entitled to one mistake, whether it is his choice of wife or friend.

"This barn," said the newspaperman, "is no fit home for such a noble beast, obviously as long on taste as he is on ears. I happen to know you have a spare bedroom, and that burro should be housebroken. You know, Susie, like your dog is."

Susie knew. Her father knew. His former friend knows it was a beautiful relation, while it lasted. The neighbors don't know the zoning laws yet, but they are studying hard. A boy burro, bereft of a girl burro on a moonlit winter night, is not a sad sight, but it is a wierd sound, Romeo without Juliet, Marilyn without a wiggle, Cleopatra without Marc or even an asp to cuddle.

But it all boils down to one fact, in final analysis. The burro has Susie for a constant ally, and I have Susie for a daughter. Assault us, Kirkwood. We're prepared to stand you off to the last bray, and that ain't hay.

Designing Woman

Lesson From Decorations

By Elizabeth Hillyer

THE children's wish for more than one Christmas a year almost comes true when Christmas is Saturday. There's the real Christmas Day, and another like it when the house is still full of callers and Daddy stays home to play with the new toys.

Something of these days can be carried on into days to come—something of the warm togetherness of the family gathering and giving, and something, too, of the inviting and colorful effect of the holiday-bedecked rooms. Of course, the Christmas red and green and glitter must go, but if a room has lacked decoration and color, it will look drab as it never did before when Christmas things are packed away.

CERTAIN SPOTS in the room will suddenly look empty. The need is plain for filling them with distinctive accessories and with plants. Year 'round plants, to take the place of the Christmas greenery, which did so much for the room.

The color scheme may look listless after the red and green goes. Add more of a bright color already in the room, or a new bright color. When the tree lights and the Christmas candles go off for the last time, it may be all too clear how uninteresting the room's usual lighting is. Make new plans to use light for decoration, to point up colors, and create an inviting atmosphere. Study furniture arrangements as they are now. It may be that the changes made for unusual holiday demands are inspiration for permanent arrangement, or are good enough to keep.

THOSE SPARKLING DECORATIONS you made yourself—of course, they're too frivolous and temporary to use except at this time of year. But don't forget what has been learned from the making, the inventing, the hand-craftsmanship and the ideafull arranging of them. Make more important use of these developing skills, now that you've learned what a designing woman you are.

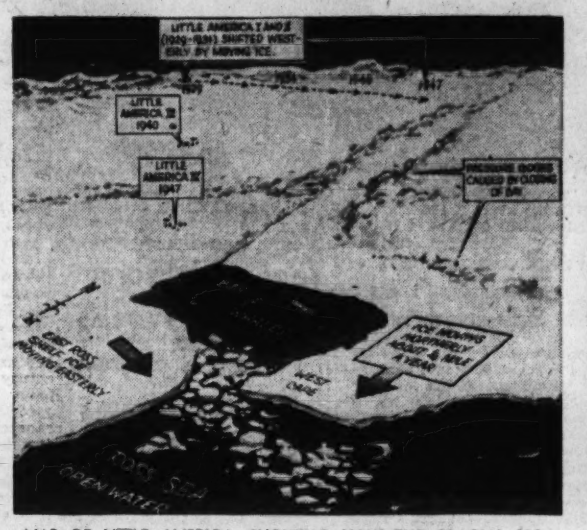
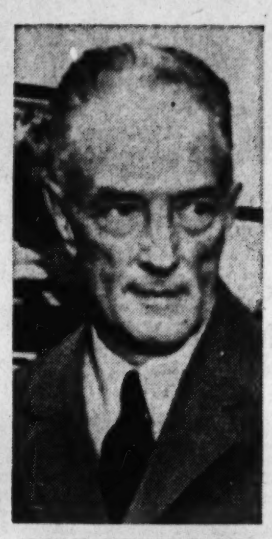
Heading for Bottom of World

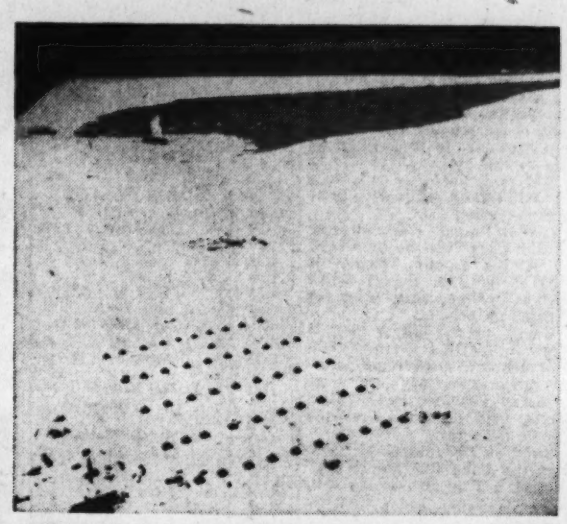
Navy Icebreaker's Job Is to Lay Plans for Another Big Expedition to Little America



MAP OF LITTLE AMERICA, SHOWING HOW THE GLACIAL ICE SHIFTS CONSTANTLY IN VARIOUS DIRECTIONS.



ADMIRAL RICHARD E. BYRD . . . LED FOUR EXPEDITIONS.



AERIAL VIEW OF LITTLE AMERICA MADE DURING ADMIRAL BYRD'S 1946-47 EXPEDITION.

(Editor's note: A Navy icebreaker is en route to the strange, silent continent of Antarctic to see what evidence remains of four expeditions led by Admiral Richard Byrd and to lay groundwork for another major exploration. Here a reporter who accompanied Adm. Byrd eight years ago tells what the icebreaker may find—and why.)

By Alton L. Blakeslee

NEW YORK, (AP)

A United States icebreaker is sailing to Little America —but lonely Little America may already have sailed out to meet it.

For this famous outpost at the bottom of the world could well be an iceberg right now, slowly floating north to die. It has to ship to sea someday because Little America is not on land at all—it has just been sitting precariously on the edge of a gigantic ice cube.

It is, or will be, the world's most unusual iceberg, born in a booming, cataclysmic icequake. Its flat top will sport a windmill, radio masts, flags. Inside will be a fabulous cargo of airplanes, steaks, huts, tractors, apples, books, toothpaste, clothes, fuel oil, a hundred items cached by four Byrd expeditions—enough of everything to have kept a family warm, well-fed and well-clothed for years.

Bit by bit, this Little America iceberg will drop its cargo as it edges into the warming waters of the Pacific Ocean.

Learning whether Little America has stayed put—and is still useable—is one assignment of the Navy icebreaker Atka, now nearing New Zealand.

The Atka will seek out suitable sites for a big United States scientific expedition within the next year or two to probe secrets of the frozen Antarctic continent—a land in which nine nations, including Russia, are keenly interested.

JUST eight years ago, I was in a small party which dug into the icy snow and slid down a hole into the buried buildings of the Little America camp built in 1934. In one hut I found a book, "The Last Days of Pompeii." R. Adm. Richard E. Byrd inscribed it for me—"We are seeing the last days of Little America, too."

The death signs are unmistakable. Part of a floor warped up . . . some connecting tunnels askew or impassable . . . some buildings completely crushed under a mantle of 20 feet of packed snow.

For Little America is alive with fatal movement. It is part of a moving glacier or shelf of ice creeping out over the cold Ross sea. The only land at Little America is the sea bottom, hundreds of feet down.

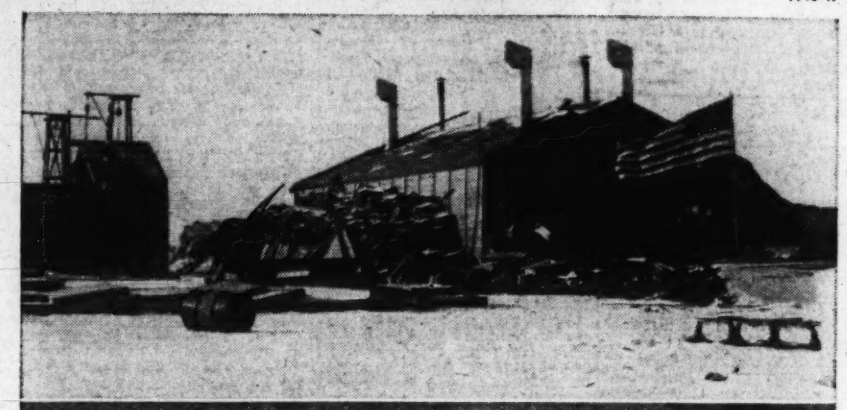
The shelf—the Ross ice shelf —is a huge, thick flat ice cube bigger than all of New England and New York state.

Its seaward face runs 400 miles east to west across the Ross sea. It springs sheer and majestic straight from the sea, rising 50 to 100 feet above the water. It extends 400 miles south to the mountains which ring the two-mile high polar plateau. Glaciers spilling down through these mountains form the shelf, push it inexorably northward, farther to sea. Great chunks crack off into the sea, forming gigantic icebergs.

In the Little America area, the shelf grinds over deeply-buried Roosevelt Island. Part of the shelf keeps moving straight northward. Part of it is curved, twisted to move westward by north.

This curving creates two great moving jaws of ice, fashioning an indentation or harbor at the edge of the shelf—the Bay of Whales.

The eastern jaw or cape is Little America. On it sits the four snow-buried Little America camps built by expeditions of 1928-30, 1933-35, 1939-41 and 1946-47.



BEFORE-AND-AFTER BLIZZARD VIEWS OF A CAMP SET UP IN LITTLE AMERICA BY A UNITED STATES ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Little America can ship to sea on its silent funeral voyage in one of two ways. Waters of the Ross sea can undermine it, crack it free. Or it can be torn loose by the unimaginable force of a grinding collision between the two jaws or moving rivers of ice, each powered by billions of tons of ice.

Dr. Paul A. Siple, Boy Scout selected to go on the 1929 Byrd expedition, and now a geographer and expert on climate, measured the ice movements eight years ago. Each jaw is moving nearly four feet a day—a quarter mile yearly, he found. One flows north, the other moves sidewise against it.

This action is closing the Bay of Whales. But come the collision, enough ice may be ripped free to create a Bay of Whales as big as 800 square miles in area, Dr. Siple estimates.

In 1929, the bay was big enough so Adm. Byrd could sail six miles southward inside it and set up his first Little America on the high shelf. He could go almost as far in 1934, and then he set up his second camp atop the first one, using some of the original buildings lower down. That year he erected a tall tower with a windmill to generate power. About 20-odd feet of the tower had still escaped burial by the snows in 1947.

BY 1939, the bay was only a few miles deep, in 1947 the harbor was a small thing, and Navy ships penetrated only about a mile. The nutcracker jaws of the bay nearly met and locked in 1948. Surely they have collided since then, so narrow was the entrance. Did the jaw containing Little America go plunging into the sea?

The Atka will soon report the answer, or tell whether any of the old buildings still are useable, not crushed by the shearing movement of the ice in which they lay.

Admiral Byrd, now 66, who is serving as technical adviser to the forthcoming Antarctic expedition, would bet that Little America has survived the icy collision.

It was chosen, he said, because of its advantages as a base for explorations. All the supplies there have been preserved under ice and snow and could be retrieved.

Byrd's keen eyes sparkle as he talks about the Antarctic, an area with which his name will always be associated. There, he says, lies the last great frontier—a land of nearly 6,000,000 square miles of mystery, beauty and brutal cold, a laboratory for science, a treasurehouse perhaps of fabulous resources.

It is last a land which, according to persistent reports, is desolate enough to provide an ideal testing ground for H-bombs. Reports that the United States has any such plans have been denied by the Atomic Energy Commission and the State Department.

The Atka will inspect the Little America area, Adm. Byrd said, then head eastward to explore the area in and near Sulzberger Bay. Later it will move nearly halfway around the continent, passing below the tip of South America, over to the Weddell sea coastline.

Details of the big expedition, first announced last October by President Eisenhower, have not yet been disclosed. It probably will include several over-winter camps, one possibly set up at the South Pole itself. That would require flying in equipment to stock a camp for a few men, who then would live for six months in Stygian darkness with outside temperatures of 70 to 90 degrees below zero.

FROM these sites, scientists will work for months on studies of cosmic rays, weather—this polar region is a great weather factory — magnetism, solar activity and upper air physics, including the ionosphere, or electrified layer of air, glaciology, oceanography.

The expedition will be part of the International Geophysical Year in 1957-58, when scientists of 38 nations will co-operate in world wide research seeking answers to puzzles on all these subjects, and more as well, the U.S. program will be carried out under joint auspices of the National Academy of Sciences and National Science Foundation.

Scientists aboard the icebreaker Atka, commanded by Cmdr. Glen Jacobsen of Seattle, already are busy with research on cosmic rays, radio communications, weather, upper winds, and other phases of science. What they report will aid in planning details of the expedition.

A quarter century ago, taking off from Little America, Adm. Byrd flew over the South Pole and repeated the feat early in 1947.

"Now, 25 years later, there's a lot of interest in Antarctica," he says. "It is a fascinating and strange place. Our Government is interested and scientists are greatly interested—for one of the most fertile fields for science is at the bottom of the world.

"Who knows what unlimited resources lie under that mantle of snow and ice? There is coal —you see it on the sides of mountains jutting above the snow cap. Someday it may be possible to develop the resources, take out valuable minerals which the world will need."

It is reasonable to expect that there may be uranium somewhere.

Adm. Byrd also sees Antarctica as a natural deep-freeze, a possible storage area for surplus crops of wheat or meat or other staples, which could be kept indefinitely until needed in lean years, or by less wealthy countries.

THE lures of Antarctica have led many nations to explorations, even recently to setting up of "permanent" camps or sites as a basis for territorial claims there.

The near neighbors, of course, are interested — New Zealand, Australia, Argentina and Chile. But Britain, France, Norway and the United States have carried on extensive explorations.

"And I know the Russians are interested," Adm. Byrd said. "Norwegian whalers have seen their ships down there, and there have been reports they flew planes from their whalers."

Whether the Russians have been only whaling, or have landed on the coast is not clear.

Some nations have claimed large areas of Antarctica. The United States has not made any official claims, does not recognize other claims, and is reserving its rights there.

On the basis of past explorations by Adm. Byrd, the U.S. Navy and other American explorers, this country could enter a strong claim for sizeable chunks of the sleeping continent. Whether it ever will—or how all the conflicting national claims might be adjudicated—seems to be as much an enigma as is knowledge of just what are the resources and potentials of a continent buried thousands of years ago under falling snow.

Some day the mystery might all be crystal clear—if the millions of thick square miles of ice all melted. If that happened, New York, San Francisco, London, and many other places would be drowned by rising oceans. Antarctica—where once grew trees similar to the California sequoia—might then be a fine and logical place to live.

Meanwhile its mysteries beckon, especially to the adventurous spirit of Adm. Byrd. Will he be going back a year from now? You read the answer in his eager blue eyes before he can answer.

"I would like to. But that's up to the top echelons. I hope they will agree to my going down again."

No Mere House Will Boss Mary Margaret

By Mary Margaret McBride

THE minute people hear about my little dream house, they start to advise and suggest. I'm grateful, of course, but they scare and unsettle me a little, too, making me wonder all over again how on earth anybody ever musters up courage enough to be a householder.

One person says hot air heat is best. The next day someone else plugs for the radiant type that comes out of walls and ceilings. A man who enjoys working around his home discusses water problems in terms of footing tiles, roof flashings and waterproof cellars, seeming to believe that I'll understand what he's talking about.

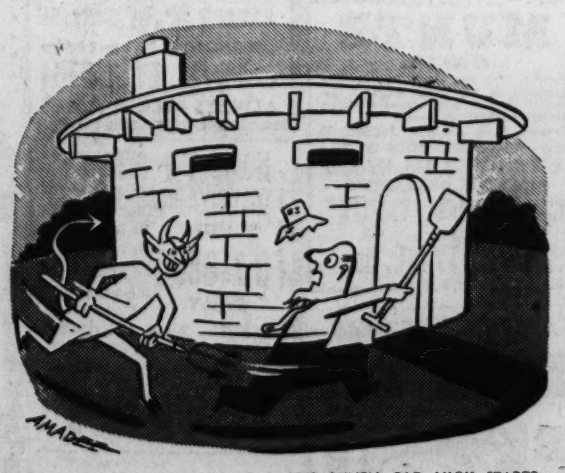
EVERYBODY tells me stories about unusual homes people have built. I was sent a picture of one cornerless house. Seems the reason it's built that way is so you can run around it faster when the devil starts chasing you—that's the story, anyhow. They said the farmer who built it back in Civil War times had a definite feeling that some day the devil would try to catch him. So he figured it all out—how much time and energy he'd save if he made both ends of the house gently rounded. It's stone, but when you see it from the end, the curved wall makes it look something like a ship with a bow above the water line. Once he'd eliminated corners, the home-builder found the fireplace would have to be curved, too, in order to fit into the rounded walls. It's two and one-half stories high, but the end walls are solid stone except for two tiny windows up near the roof—probably so there wouldn't be any extra opening for the devil to get in.



YOU CAN RUN AROUND IT FASTER WHEN OLD NICK STARTS CHASING YOU.

Then there was the man on Cape Cod who made a lot of money and wanted to prove to his neighbors he could afford the grandest mansion on the entire Cape. He had his architect draw plans that borrowed from every style of architecture in Europe, scrambled them together and then threw in a 100-foot art gallery. The result was impressive and expensive, if not beautiful.

AT THE LAST MINUTE, though, the poor man got homesick for the old gray weatherbeaten Cape Cod cottage that he'd grown up in and so he told his architect to put the new house up around the old. Then, whenever he needed to, he could escape to wind-worn, familiar Homesick House, with vines climbing over the windows, a bare floor scrubbed until the wood is satin-smooth, old pewter and brass around the big stone fireplace.

House owners nearly always personify their homes in whimsical fashion but even practical, unimaginative souls assure me that houses really are very demanding. Any Saturday or Sunday in the suburbs proves this.

The house has its victims constantly fixing up leaky downspouts, mowing the lawn or planting new trees.

But being forewarned, I propose to establish from the very outset that I'm boss of MY house.

Fables Of the Famous

By E. E. Edgar

COOKING: Millionaire inventor Charles F. Kettering has a hankering for plain foods, especially hamburgers, which he ate as a steady diet during his less prosperous days.

Some years ago, Kettering was vacationing at a plush Florida hotel, famed for its exotic cuisine. After sampling the menu for several meals, the inventor went looking for more palatable fare. He found the food he wanted at a roadside lunch counter.

Only one thing made him hesitate. He didn't relish the idea of being stared at when he drove up in his expensive limousine. Kettering, famed for solving difficult problems, soon overcame this obstacle, too, by keeping a chauffeur's cap in his car.

He donned the cap whenever he went to the lunch counter. After that, nobody paid any attention to him, and he was able to enjoy his meals in blissful anonymity.

Nice Day: Although British political leader Herbert Morrison enjoys an occasional game of golf, the same cannot be said for those who accompany him on the links.

One day, he was playing nine holes with a friend. Approaching the green on the first hole, he grazed the caddie with his drive. Teeing off for the fifth, he struck a woman who was strolling in the woods to the left. In the ninth, he barely missed his companion. When it was finally over, the latter slumped into a clubhouse chair.

"This is the wildest day of golf I've ever been through," he gasped.

"Oh well," said Morrison philosophically, "it was a pleasant walk, anyway."

GESTURE: During his early days with the Metropolitan Opera, before he became accustomed to his high fees, tenor Enrico Caruso insisted on being paid in cash.

One payday, he was chatting with the wig maker, when the paymaster brought around his bundle. The wig maker took one look at the money and his eyes almost popped.

ENRICO CARUSO . . . FINANCED A VACATION.

"I never saw so much money," he whispered. "If I had anywhere near that amount, I'd—"

"What would you do?" asked the tenor.

"I'd take my family on a vacation."

Caruso peeled off the $500 bill on the bottom of the roll and handed it to the other.

"Here," he said, "take them!"

Pledge: Editor Frank Crowninshield was a man of unfailing courtesy. Because of this, he once confided to a friend, he was a teetotaler.

"One day, when I was ten years old," explained Crowninshield, "I attended a prohibition meeting with my grandmother. The speaker asked those who would pledge never to touch liquor to stand up. My grandmother, an ardent dry, stood up. As a result, I became a teetotaler."

"But what has your grandmother's pledge got to do with you?" asked the friend.

"Well, naturally, I stood up also," replied Crowninshield. "You don't think I'd remain seated in the presence of a lady, do you?"

SUPPORT: One day, when he was the Governor of Massachusetts, Calvin Coolidge was advised by his secretary that a delegation was waiting to see him.

"Do they have an appointment?" asked Silent Cal.

"No," said the secretary, "but they insist on waiting. I told them you wouldn't be able to see them."

"Well, you just repeat that to them," said Coolidge, with a wink," and I'll amplify it by saying nothing."

TOLERANCE: French artist Paul Cezanne had a son who was the apple of his eye. One day, when the boy was three, he was in the studio watching his father.

Suddenly the child picked up a sharp instrument and punctured some holes in the canvas. A friend present, expected Cezanne to fly into a rage. To the painter, however, his son could do no wrong. Instead of losing his temper, the artist examined the canvas with wonder in his eyes.

"Look!" he exclaimed proudly. "The little genius has opened the windows in the houses I was painting."

"Show of Shows" by Himself

Donald O'Connor Started Trouping at Six Months

By Josephine Jablons

The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.

FOR the past five seasons Saturday night television viewers have been accustomed to watching "Your Show of Shows," one of the most successful variety shows of all time. This season, thanks to Max Liebman entering the "spectacular" field and both Imogene Coca and Sid Caesar striking out on their own shows, the field has been left relatively clear for the alternate week display of versatility by the talented young performer Donald O'Connor.

O'Connor, a show of shows in himself, is a one-man variety bill whose experience belies his relatively young (29) years. Jimmy Durante, Donald's alter ego, on the Texaco Star Theater (KSD-TV, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays), nods appreciatively when Donald breaks into a romantic song after a long and difficult dance routine, and murmurs, "That's my boy!"

And Donald is quite a talented boy, handling intricate dance steps, crooning popular ballads, being a juggler, an acrobat, mimic and actor, and delivering comedy lines with perfect timing.

BORN into a show business family (his father was a circus strongman and his mother a bareback rider), he joined the family act at the age of six months because "the more people in the act, the greater the pay check."

Since that early initiation, he has worked steadily, going on to vaudeville, later the movies and now he combines his movie work with television.

O'Connor, whose show was one of the early ones to switch from "live" to film, still thinks that film is the ultimate form for television.

"With film," he explained, you can do a take more than once and work for some semblance of perfection in your performance." Moreover, he feels this medium allows him more scope for elaborate musical numbers.

"LIVE" television, he says, offers "the personal gratification of immediate laughs from your audience. But," he added, "I've worked in movies so long I'm used to telling jokes without getting laughs."

All his songs on his Saturday night show are pre-recorded. Thanks to years of movie practice he doesn't have trouble synchronizing his lip movements with the sound track.

"Pre-recording is essential," he explained, "because you're too out of breath after a big dance number to go right into a song."

In addition to the star, there are five writers on O'Connor's show. Sid Miller, the head writer, also appears on the show. The star's niece, Patsy O'Connor, is one of the song writers.

DONALD O'CONNOR . . . DRAWS "THAT'S MY BOY" PRAISE FROM DURANTE.

All told his staff consists of about 75 people. The films are produced at General Service Studios in Hollywood. It's a cozy arrangement with O'Connor's offices right next door.

He not only stars on the show, but directs it, and juggles his time so he is able to edit the last show, direct and appear in the current one and worry about casting the upcoming stanza. "There's never enough time," he said. "But somehow it all gets done."

Television Letter Box

THIS is an open letter, written in hopes some of our television comedians may read it. I feel sure I speak for thousands of other parents who, like myself, have children in the "Santa Claus" age — the best years of their lives. Nothing could hurt more than to watch the expression of doubt on a small child's face, watching the comedians putting on their Santa Claus roles, only to identify themselves at the end. If they had to play Santa, they should have gone all the way. After all, the kids are only young once.

WILLIAM E. MIRGAIN

Everyone at our house is happy Kukla, Fran and Ollie are back on KSD-TV. We've always liked them and missed seeing them and have had friends say the same thing.

A KSD-TV FAN

I do not agree with Jack Webb that commercials have to be on film. I very seldom listen to ordinary filmed commercials. I will listen to every word that Garroway says on what he is selling on "Today" and go out and try any that I need. All live programs and advertising are much more convincing.

E. M. S.

Would like to comment on letter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Keest protesting against the use of cigaret and beer advertising and suggesting more religious programs on television. Cigarets and beer are not necessary, by any means, but I would like to mention that revenue from cigaret and beer programs help keep a lot of good entertainment on the air. Religious faith is the backbone of any strong nation. But until maybe a TV channel for religion can be maintained, please let us beer drinkers and cigaret smokers

As Crosby Sees It

Millions for Laughs No Laughing Matter

By John Crosby

NEW YORK, Dec. 25.

ELEVEN MILLION DOLLARS, my mother always told me, is a lot of money. "If you ever get hold of $11,000,000, don't spend it all in one place," she'd say. "Mind now."

Well, like a lot of parental injunctions—wear your rubbers in the rain, drink plenty of orange juice—that one got mislaid somewhere and the last time I had $11,000,000 I went out on the town and—well, you know how the stuff slips through your fingers. The next day: a hangover and barely a million and a quarter left over, all in crumpled bills in my right trouser pocket.

I just thought I'd pass Mother's advice on to Jackie Gleason who needs it, at the moment. His own mother very likely told him the same thing but he's probably forgotten, as boys will. Don't spend it all in one place; spread it around. Mind now, Jackie.

GLEASON IS THE highest priced comedian to come along until the next one comes along. And it just goes to show how inflation is running wild in the land. Why, lawsy me, I can remember way back when CBS acquired Jack Benny for a measly $2,250,000 just a couple of years ago. I distinctly remember all the neighbors, up and down Madison avenue, gathering on the street corners and shaking their heads over that extravagance.

"Two-and-a-quarter million dollars for a comedian," they'd say. "Why, sakes alive, time was when a man could buy Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey for that kind of money."

Well, time passed. A good cup of coffee went up to a dime. The subway went up to 15 cents. And the comedians rose even more sharply. Nowadays, $2,250,000 won't even buy a good straight man much less a comedian.

THROW ANOTHER LOG on the fire, son, draw up a chair and let me tell you about the old days. Well, sir, once upon a time—you won't believe this, son, but so help me it's true—a man named Edward Noble bought the whole American Broadcasting Company, lock, stock and barrel, for $5,500,000. Got permanent possession, too. Now they pay $11,000,000 for one comedian. Only three-year occupancy, too.

I was kicking this latest financial transaction around with my friend, Jim Mainwaring, the sage of Scarsdale.

"Whatsamatter with these people?" he inquired. "They crazy?"

"Yes," I elaborated.

There may be another explanation—stock deals, capital gains, income tax deductions, long range amortization, short range nepotism, inverted fiduciary sharecropping, or maybe even seasonal profit-sharing. But, I prefer my own explanation. Eleven million dollars for a comedian! It's just plain nuts.

But I'll be listening next Saturday and all I can say is this: He better be funny.

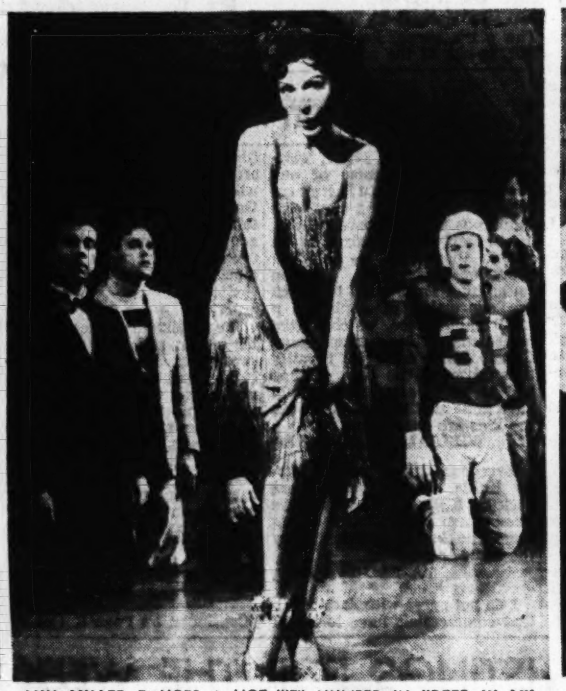
TIM HERBERT WILL BE STARRED IN THE FARCE, "ROOM SERVICE," WHICH WILL OPEN TUESDAY AT THE EMPRESS. IT'S ABOUT A SHOESTRING THEATRICAL PRODUCER.

CARTOONIST BILL MAULDIN'S CONCEPTION OF THE IRATE COL. PURDY AND THE SLY SAKINI IN "THE TEAHOUSE OF THE AUGUST MOON" AT THE AMERICAN.

DONALD O'CONNOR, MARILYN MONROE AND MITZI GAYNOR IN THE "LAZY" NUMBER FROM IRVING BERLIN'S "THERE'S NO BUSINESS LIKE SHOW BUSINESS" AT THE ST. LOUIS.

KIRK DOUGLAS AND A FRIENDLY SEAL IN WALT DISNEY'S "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA," FROM THE JULES VERNE NOVEL, AT THE ORPHEUM.



ANN MILLER DANCES A HOT "IT" NUMBER IN "DEEP IN MY HEART," MUSICAL BIOGRAPHY OF SIGMUND ROMBERG, COMING TO LOEW'S STATE NEW YEAR'S EVE.

DORIS DAY AND FRANK SINATRA IN "YOUNG AT HEART," ROMANTIC DRAMA WITH SONGS, SCHEDULED TO OPEN AT THE FOX TUESDAY.

Tim Herbert at Empress In Farce, 'Room Service'

"ROOM SERVICE," a fast rowdy farce by John Murray and Allen Boretz, which was a New York hit in 1937 and 1938, will be revived at the Empress Playhouse by the Ansell brothers for the week starting Tuesday night, with Tim Herbert as visiting star. The theater has been dark for a Christmas vacation for the past two weeks.

The farce is about a shoestring play producer and his efforts to get out of a big hotel bill and still get his show on the boards. It ran for 496 performances originally on Broadway, in a production by George Abbott. It played the American Theater here in 1938, and was revived on Broadway in 1953. It was last seen here at the Community Playhouse in 1947. It was made into a movie starring the Marx Brothers in 1937.

Herbert is a night club and musical comedy comedian who made a number of appearances at Muny Opera, sometimes teamed with Jack Goode. He played last year at the Empress in "Charley's Aunt." He will play the producer, Gordon Miller.

Henry Travares of the resident company will play the aspiring playwright. Leo Lucker will be the apoplectic hotel manager trying to collect a $1200 bill who winds up in the end financing the play himself. Gordon Peters also will have a leading role. A newcomer to the Empress will be Michyl Veach, an actress who has played leads in numerous summer stock productions. Others in the cast will be James Paul, Gena Bantle, Vincent Vernon, Joseph Lomuto, Alan Hanson, Don Oliver and Herb Macklin.

The next play, opening Tuesday, Jan. 4 for one week, will be William Inge's drama, "Picnic," starring Sonny Tufts. No play has been announced for the week of Jan. 11. For the week of Jan. 18, the playhouse will have Joanne Dru and John Ireland starring in John van Druten's drama, "I Am a Camera."

At the Movies

By Myles Standish

THERE'S NO BUSINESS LIKE SHOW BUSINESS—Most spectacular and best musical of the year. Six stars—Ethel Merman, Donald O'Connor, Dan Dailey, Marilyn Monroe, Johnny Ray and Mitzi Gaynor—display a wealth of talent in bright and lavish renditions of Irving Berlin songs, old and new. In CinemaScope. ST. LOUIS.

20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA—Walt Disney's first CinemaScope production captures the spirit of high romantic adventure of Jules Verne's famous novel. James Mason makes a strong Capt. Nemo, Kirk Douglas is the harpoonist and Paul Lukas the scientist. ORPHEUM.

HANSEL AND GRETEL—Some amazing electronically controlled puppets called kinemins appear almost human as they enact the fairy story to the Humperdinck music. Charming, but mostly for children. PAGEANT and RICHMOND.

SITTING BULL—A different version of the Custer massacre, with a sympathetic viewpoint towards the Sioux Indians, a noble Sitting Bull, and an arrogant Col. Custer. Dale Robertson plays a cavalry officer who befriends the Sioux, and J. Carrol Naish is Sitting Bull. The battle of the Little Big Horn is spectacular in CinemaScope, but the dramatics are mediocre. LOEW'S STATE.

THE VANISHING PRAIRIE—Walt Disney's patient and clever cameramen have captured some remarkable shots of prairie and mountain animals in nature's grim struggle for survival. SHADY OAK.

SARATOGA TRUNK—Ingrid Bergman and Gary Cooper in a reissue of the absorbing 1945 picturization of the Edna Ferber novel. Also another reissue, the 1946 "THE BIG SLEEP"—Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall in a private eye thriller. FOX.

THIS IS CINERAMA—Eleventh month for the depth process. AMBASSADOR.

Art and Artists

New Lithographs at City Museum

By Howard Derrickson

LITHOGRAPHY, an art medium second only to photography in significance for education of the general public, is given comprehensive treatment in a current City Art Museum show. On view through Jan. 31 in lower-floor galleries U, V and W are 62 lithographs, 14 of them in color. Among them are a number of recent accessions, including three Odilon Redons never shown here before.

Titled "Lithographs of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries," the display was a cause of regret for two women visitors who agreed they would like to have seen "some of the lithographs from the earlier centuries."

Actually, Aloys Senefelder of Bavaria, only graphic-arts process inventor whose name is known to art historians, did not get around to inventing lithography until 1797. Thus the three-year hiatus in representation should prove an endurable gap in the knowledge of those who have apparently failed to fill in others.

Naturally enough, the show is richest in work of the French school. Probably no other print medium attracted to itself so great a group of masters as tried their hands at lithography between 1895 and 1901 in Paris.

Well represented in the new show are such illustrious nineteenth-century names as Ingres, Daumier, Degas, Gauguin, Redon and Toulouse Lautrec.

ACROSS THE CHANNEL things were different. William M. Ivins Jr., author of "Prints and Visual Communication," is fortunate — in some ways — in having a friend, understandably anonymous, whom he can rely on now "to express what most Englishmen thought" about 1870.

"He tells me," Ivins writes, "that a lithograph has no character and is merely a reproduction of a drawing, and therefore is not comparable to an etching or engraving, which has exquisite artistic character no matter how dull it may be."

In reality, as the show illustrates with a fullness not possible here before, the advantage of lithography is that the artist's drawing can be made with the greatest freedom and yet it and the print are practically identical, with no reworking or copying by another hand.

The wide variety of effects permitted by lithography, in fact, was the aim of Miss Mary Powell, education supervisor at the museum, in assembling the show, she said.

TRANSFER FROM the lithographer's stone is so complete and so free from linear schemes of other graphic-arts mediums that a lithograph can be as sketchy and loose as Manet's "Race Course," part of the show, or as minutely finished as the Ingres portrait displayed.

Other ranges are from Whistler's "Chelsea Rags" and "Dancing Girl," both as delicate and diaphanous as spun glass, to the deep, dramatic blacks of George Bellow's familiar boxing prints "Firpo Knocking Dempsey Out of the Ring" and "Stag at Sharkey's."

Of the new Redons, a favorite of visitors has been "Le Lisiur" (The Reader), its attraction possibly springing from unconscious association. For the old man ensconced beneath a web-like radiance of sunlight streaming in a window recalls the same artist's well known but more ominous and Poe-esque print of a spider.

OF OTHER RECENT ACCESSIONS, Pissarro's Rouen dock scene approaches the quality of a charcoal sketch and Marino Marini's "Horse and Rider" employs yellow, blue and black angularities, as in some modern painting, to communicate the speed, violence and abandonment inherent in the subject. The Marini was a gift from the late Curt Valentin.

Further extension of the medium, in the direction of oil painting's richness, is made by Churchill portraitist Graham Sutherland in his writhing, living, abstract "Turning Forms," Rouault's opulent-toned "Clowns" and Picasso's "Owl on Chair."

This and three other Picasso lithographs recently acquired by the museum and chosen for the exhibition are treated by Miss Powell in a paper prepared for the museum Bulletin. Included are the famous "Dove of Peace," drawn for a poster for the Partisans of Peace Congress held in Paris in 1949, "Head of a Girl" and "David and Bathsheba."

Miss Powell has selected the Biblical litho as the Print of the Month, and in an accompanying placard based on her paper she traces the print's evolution from a Lucas Cranach painting through three states, the last so different from the others as to rank as a separate work of art.

Malcolm Frager Recital

Malcolm Frager, pianist, will appear in recital Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. at Sheldon Auditorium, 3648 Washington boulevard. His program will include Bach preludes and fugues, sonatas by Beethoven and Chopin, and works by Schumann and Rachmaninoff.

Frager has been studying with Carl Friedberg in New York, where he made his Town Hall debut two years ago, at the age of 17. In 1952, while attending the Conservatoire Americain in Fontainebleau, he received the Prix d'Excellence in piano. He has also studied at the Vienna Conservatory.

Pianist Skolovsky To Play Gershwin With Symphony

PIANIST Zadel Skolovsky will be soloist in the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra subscription concerts at 2 p.m. Friday and 8:40 p.m. Saturday, New Year's night, in Kiel Auditorium Opera House. Lukas Foss will be guest conductor in his first appearance with the orchestra.

The soloist and orchestra will play George Gershwin's Concerto in F. The orchestra will offer Schubert's Symphony No. 7 and two works new to the concerts, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, and a special "Salute to the New Year for Brass Ensemble"—consisting of the chorale, "The Old Year's Gone" (J. S. Bach), Two Sinfonie by Monteverdi, and Bach's "Second Setting of Chorale."

Skolovsky rose to national prominence in 1945 when he was engaged by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony as a last-minute substitute for the ailing Josef Hoffman in a Carnegie Hall concert broadcast nationally. He appeared with the St. Louis Symphony in 1950. Foss, composer, music professor at the University of California and director of the U.C.L.A. Symphony Orchestra, conducted two Little Symphony concerts here last summer.

The orchestra, with Vladimir Golschmann directing, will repeat its Christmas program of last Thursday night at 3 p.m. today in the Opera House. Dr. Mario Salvador, St. Louis Cathedral organist, will be soloist, and the 120-voice Pontifical Boys' Choir and the 28-voice St. Louis Cathedral Men's Choir will take part.

The Symphony will present its present second "pop" concert of the season in the opera house at 3 p.m. next Sunday, with Harry Farbman conducting. Jean Border, soprano, and Karl Toenjes, tuba player, will be soloists, and Frank Eschen will be narrator. Miss Border will sing an aria from "Tannhauser," the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," Grieg's "Ich Liebe Dich," and Kern's "All the Things You Are." Eschen and Toenjes will be featured in Kleinsinger's "Tubby the Tuba." The orchestra will play excerpts from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" and Dukas's "Sorcerer's Apprentice," a suite from Bizet's "Carmen," the overture to Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1."

Gallery Notes

The show, largest concentration of Dutch paintings assembled thus far for display in America, will close Feb. 13 in Toledo to reopen in Toronto, Canada.

'Teahouse' Starts Final Week at American Tonight

"THE TEAHOUSE OF THE AUGUST MOON," John Patrick's Pulitzer and Drama Critics prize-winning comedy, will start its second and final week at the American Theater at 7:30 o'clock tonight. All other night performances this week, including New Year's Eve and New Year's night, will be at 8:30. The Saturday matinee will be at 2:30 o'clock.

Burgess Meredith and Scott McKay, who played with the Broadway company for 10 weeks, are starred. Meredith plays Sakini the rascally interpreter who has his own way of getting around the United States Army occupation forces in a village in Okinawa. McKay plays the bumbling but kindly Capt. Fisby.

The next attraction announced for the American will be Ballets Espagnols, the Spanish dance revue which will appear the week of Monday, Jan. 24.

Mahatmi Ghandi Life To Be Filmed

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 25 (UP) —Film director-producer Otto Preminger today announced plans to film the life of Mahatma Ghandi and said he had received a pledge of "full co-operation" from Indian Prime Minister Nehru.

Preminger said he had visited New Delhi and found Nehru "very receptive" to his idea for the story based on the life of the "passive resistance" leader.

The picture will be made in India, Preminger said. Shooting probably will start next November. He said the Indian government assured him of a free hand with no requirement that he submit a script or any scene for approval.

Slim Silhouette

Suits that have longer jackets stress the vogue of the slim but straighter silhouette that is scheduled for general popularity in the new year. Many of the jackets extend to finger-tip length and are accompanied by straightline skirts. The jacket which is cut with a rounded peplum longer at the back than the front is one style which is being featured. Another model has a straight hemline and wide pockets that are placed comparatively low.

White Collars Popular

The white-collar girl will be a fashionable person next spring, judging by the number of dresses, suits and coats that have white collars in addition to that made of the costume fabric. Some of the collars are accompanied by wide bow ties given an Eton effect to the entire ensemble.

A MUSICAL WITH HEART ... "Heart" is Hollywoodese for warmth, sincerity, believability — and after seeing M-G-M's holiday treat DEEP IN MY HEART we can tell you this CinemaScope and Color musical has it—plus! The plus is a star-studded cast without equal. Jose Ferrer not only turns in a brilliant characterization—you'd expect that—but sings, dances, and clowns uproariously. Merle Oberon and Helen Traubel shine—and what a lineup of stars to deliver Sigmund Romberg's rousing melodies! There's Cyd Charisse, Rosemary Clooney, Vic Damone, Howard Keel, Gene Kelly and his brother Fred, Tony Martin, Ann Miller, Jane Powell, and many more. Walter Pidgeon and Paul Henreid add their artistry. You can tell DEEP IN MY HEART is a BIG one. We'd say it's much more. It's a human, richly romantic story that will live deep in our heart for a long, long time.

'Portrait of Lady' Dreary; Jennifer Jones 'Immature'

By Walter F. Kerr

NEW YORK, Dec. 25. "PORTRAIT OF A LADY," which opened this week is a small, dreary island of a show, entirely surrounded by Cathleen Nesbitt. In the William Archibald dramatization of Henry James's novel, Miss Nesbitt plays an American expatriate who has so thoroughly forgotten the land of her birth that she can only connect it, vaguely, with some one called Johnny Appleseed. She has spent years cultivating herself in the approved Italian-villa manner, she has seen and seen through everything, and she is now a figure of tart and elegant mockery.

Miss Nesbitt's happy smirk, as she munches a grape and runs a verbal stiletto through the innocents and scoundrels around her, is a joy to watch—and to share. Indeed, any time this graceful, accomplished, and penetrating actress is willing to read the whole of Mr. James' novel, single-handed, I shall be happy to attend.

She is, though, the only performer to bring any sense of wit, or of pointed social meaning, to the well intentioned venture. Good actors abound: There is Halliwell Hobbes in a fragment of a part, Jan Farrand making the most of two brief scenes, Barbara O'Neil in a longish but mystifying portrait. Also on stage are Douglas Watson, Robert Flemying, Kathleen Comegys—all ready to serve.

AND THERE IS a radiant visual center to the proceedings in the person of Jennifer Jones. Miss Jones, making her debut on Broadway, moves with delicacy, smiles enchantingly, and looks like several million dollars in Cecil Beaton's white, beige and wine-red costumes. She is, however, technically immature. The lines are filtered softly and musically through a kind of dramatic hour-glass: each bit of dialogue passes at the same rate, and with pretty much the same intonation. The emotional reactions are limited, too: There is a kind of childlike gayety, and there is a tight-lipped, drawn evasiveness—and the catalogue is complete. Though Miss Jones finds some dignity and a sudden trace of force in a troubled last-act scene, the performance as a whole is curiously light, unvaried, thin.

Chicken, for a "dark" fricassee, may be broiled instead of browned in a skillet. This is a good technique to use when there are dieters in your family and you are cutting down on the use of fat.

The "Mr. Peepers" show last Sunday was certainly in poor taste. At that early hour there are many young children enjoying television, and it seems a shame to have Santa Claus mocked for them to see, when they are enjoying the childish thrills of anticipating his visit.

Wife Leaves, Taking Little Girl With Her

By Martha Carr

Dear Martha:

RECENTLY my wife left me, taking with her our little girl. She was seeing another man but when she did that before I forgave her and tried to save our marriage for the child's sake. I have tried for a reconciliation without result. I still love her and can't help it. Now she has sued for divorce and custody of the child. Tell me, is the law so blind to give her everything that matters to me? Am I not entitled to anything? This child means my whole life. Is there anything I can do or must I suffer in silence? I built my life around these two and now I am lost completely. L.B.

This is a legal question which I can't discuss with you. However, I would suggest that you seek professional help immediately. If you live in or near St. Louis, you may consult the Lawyers' Reference Service in the Civil Courts Building.

Dear Martha:

● I HAVE two wonderful in-laws whom I love very much but after almost three years I still don't call them Mom and Dad. It's not that I don't want to, but they've never said anything about it. I call them Mr. and Mrs. and it doesn't seem right. Before my son I call them Grandpa and Grandma. I've wanted to say Mom and Dad but somehow I always think they don't want me to. What should I do? CONFUSED.

They probably would love it, but, like you, are a little embarrassed to bring up the question. In some families, it's easier for the son or daughter to ask the parents on behalf of the daughter-in-law or son-in-law. Other in-laws just come right out in the open and talk it over. Too, children often give members of the family certain nicknames or names of endearment and the older ones can follow suit. Talk it over with your husband. He'll know how his parents will feel about it.

Dear Martha:

● I LIVE in an apartment house where the landlady calls all the tenants by their first names. I don't approve of this She wants to be called Mrs. So and So. I imagine you will tell me to move which I would like to do if I could find a convenient place to my work. My mother taught me to respect older people and I know I am older than the landlady. It is all right for friends to call you by your first name but I think this is more of a business relationship. CAREER WOMAN.

I agree, but as long as she doesn't interfere in the lives of her tenants and respects their privacy despite her informal manner, I think you might lose more than you would gain by making an issue of this. If she does begin to interfere, however, and tries to become a personal adviser and confidante as well as landlady, then all the tenants who agree with you can let her know how you feel.

Dear Martha:

● I AM 20 and had been going steady with a girl, 18, for the past three months. I entered the hospital two weeks ago for an operation. During the time I was hospitalized she failed to visit me and I found out she was going out with one of her ex-boy friends. When I saw her later and asked about it, she lied to me so I broke up with her. Now she wants me to come back to her. But, Martha, after all she has done to me, do you think I should trust her again? RUMMY.

She seems to have a strange idea of going steady if she's willing to date former boy friends when her current one is in the hospital. However, make sure that your suspicion is correct before you accuse her of lying to you. If you know she has done so—and I'll admit she showed little concern by failing to visit you—I think you have every reason not to trust her.

Dear Martha:

● IS IT UNFORGIVABLE to hold against a sister something her husband is responsible for? I refer to a bit of stealing from us soon after the death of my father last year. I was deeply hurt by this because we were in dire need of money, at that time especially. I told my sister what had happened but her reaction was so slight it seemed she didn't care. Since that time I have had nothing to do with either her or her husband. Am I right in feeling this way? BETRAYED.

By her strangely casual attitude, she seems to have condoned what he did, although I suppose it was natural for her to come to his defense. If you are certain that he actually took money which didn't belong to him, you have every right to be hurt and angry. Dishonesty is always a serious matter, but you will have to decide whether you want to overlook this in order to keep peace in the family. Sometimes, when a principle is involved, peace can be too costly, but it does seem unfortunate that you and your sister should become estranged over something that her husband did. See if you can't talk it out with her again before deciding to turn your back on her for good.

Dear Martha:

● I BELONG to a little sewing club that meets once each month at the homes of the various members. We have been together several years and since some of the members have moved, we are pretty much scattered over the city and county. One member, who is an especially good friend of mine, always takes me and brings me home as I have no car. Another, who lives quite a bit farther than I do, keeps asking me if she can't ride with us, and the woman who drives says she doesn't want to take her. I feel that I'm caught between the two of them and I don't know what to do. Should I refuse to go with my good friend and take a taxi or bus with the other? UNDECIDED.

Since you and the driver are such good friends, surely you can explain the awkwardness of the situation. Maybe she would be agreeable if the other woman came to your house so that the driver wouldn't have to go farther out of her way. In that case, you and the other rider should arrange to buy an occasional tankful of gasoline to show your appreciation. Otherwise, I think you would be doing a kind thing to sacrifice your own ride occasionally and accompany this woman on the bus or share a taxi. It's no fun to go alone all the time.

Martha Carr is glad to answer your questions. If you wish a personal reply, please inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. She cannot answer questions of a medical or legal nature.

Greater Emphasis on Lengthy Silhouettes

Lines Hang Straighter From the Shoulders in Dresses on Display for Winter Resort and Cruise Wear

A LONG-WAISTED DRESS IN A YELLOW, WHITE AND BLACK SILK TISSUE CREPE DESIGNED BY MOLLIE PARNIS HAS BLACK VELVET TIE.

THE MOULDED LONG-TORSO SILHOUETTE IS FEATURED BY RICHARD COLE IN A DRESS MADE OF ORLON AND WOOL JERSEY.

PURE SILK NATURAL PONGEE IS USED BY B. H. WRAGGE FOR A SLEEVELESS DRESS WITH CRISP PLEATS THAT FALL FROM THE LONG BODICE.

CAROLYN SCHNURER DESIGNED THIS SLIM, BELTLESS, SLEEVELESS SKIRT SHEATH THAT IS TYPICAL OF THE CURRENT TREND.

SLEEVELESS SHEATH FROM THE JACK HORWITZ COLLECTION HAS A BAND OF BLACK LINEN AT THE SIDE TO EMPHASIZE THE LONGER SILHOUETTE.

By Sylvia Stiles

IF the designers have their way, women who are heading south to start the new year also will be heading into a new fashion era characterized by the demise of the waistline, and a greater emphasis upon lanky, flattened silhouettes.

Featured most extensively in the dresses on display in the stores for winter resort and cruise wear but also apparent in the shape of suits, are lines that hang straighter from the shoulders. There is an obvious attempt to give a sack-like trend to one-piece dresses. For those who refuse to be thrust into clothes endorsing Dior's absence of curves, there are the many long-waisted silhouettes, many reminiscent of the twenties.

The longer, leaner silhouette wasn't greeted too enthusiastically when it was launched in Paris last summer but American designers seem to think it has merit in encouraging women to buy new clothes. The general belief was that most women would add darts to nip the waistline on the straight-hanging sheath dresses and add wide cummerbunds to soften the effect of the very long-waisted bodices. Thus far such tampering with the lines hasn't developed, and the fashions that heralded the new year are more Diorish than anticipated.

Typical of the designs which have the casual fitting midriffs are those that Carolyn Schnurer has created for winter resort wear. She uses the shirtwaist as the basis of many sheath dresses but ignores the waistline entirely. Dresses are fitted only slightly at the sides to give assurances that the hemlines hang correctly. There is an elongated shirt effect to these dresses as well as to her play suits and even her swim suits. Hemlines are quite narrow, allowing very little room for walking.

One of the most flattering silhouettes to appear and certainly a type that should win general acceptance is that of the long-waisted dress with pleated skirt attached at the hipline. Several designers including B. H. Wragge have costumes following this mode. The dresses may be worn belted or unbelted, but the belted style is preferred. Straight-hanging jackets of hip length accompany many of the dresses, creating an ensemble effect.

In keeping with this revival of the pleated skirt are some attractive separate skirts with matching overblouses or knitted tops. The box-pleated skirt made of a white woolen is noteworthy, and there also is considerable interest in fabrics of the sharkskin type. The middy style of overblouse looks well with these pleated skirts, regardless of the material.

The jersey dress made of orlon and wool is prominent in several cruise collections. Richard Cole was showing dresses in the fabric and with the longer silhouette even before the Paris openings last summer. The jerseys have an adaptability and fluid drape that make them an excellent choice for this gently shaped body line. One of the most striking dresses is in a fabric with sharply defined checks in combinations of black, red and white. Fitted smoothly through the body, the dress has skirt fullness developed through gathers placed low on the hips. Bands of solid color accent the wide, shallow neckline, the buttoned front closing, and the lowered waistline. A detachable linen collar can be used to fill in the open neck.

Mollie Parnis strikes a happy medium with several extremely pretty dresses which have the waistline defined but which have the long-bodice silhouette. The bodice extends to a V forming low-placed fullness. The designer calls this the "crowned hipline" from which a full skirt flares below clusters of tucks. Another modification is seen in the dress that has a front panel extending from the neckline to the hemline but has semi-fitted sides and back.

Wide hemlines are indorsed in printed dresses that have the long-waisted bodices although the slim skirts predominate in the models that hang straight from the shoulders. The prints include all-over flower designs on silk or cotton. There is interest, also, in the novelty striped fabric. The stripe copied from the French ribbon patterns is used extensively.

Suits that have straighter, boxy jackets and pleated skirts look new. There is a trend, also, toward the suit which has a longer, semi-fitted jacket and a slim skirt. Both follow the line of the longer and leaner theme that is characteristic of the winter resort season and forecasts 1955.

PROPER HAIR CARE:

Almost every lady has had difficult hair problems . . . Ragsdale's has these suggestions for normal hair care:

Brushing . . . your hair should be brushed thoroughly at least once daily, preferably twice. Use long, firm strokes with a stiff brush.

Shampooing . . . One GOOD shampoo a week with all of the soap completely rinsed out of the hair is normal. If your hair is oily or inclined to have dandruff a good shampoo every five days is better.

Dandruff . . . Most cases of dandruff is simple scalp shedding of dry, dead skin. A good shampoo will remove this type of dandruff and more frequent shampoos often cure it.

The two important things to watch in all shampoos . . . first, be certain that only top quality soaps are used and second, have all soap rinsed out of the hair. Ragsdale guarantees to use the best shampoo soaps obtainable.

Permanent Waves . . . The best permanent wave will grow out in three to six months, depending upon how fast your hair grows. For best results your permanent should be shampooed and styled every week. If it is impossible for you to get a professional shampoo and style weekly and you do your own hair, then we suggest the following.
You will get better service from your permanent if you pin up your hair after each shampoo. Normally you will need one or two light hair shapings between each permanent. This will keep your hair at the proper length.

A Snap Curl Cold Wave is the best for all types of hair because there is no heat to dry your hair. The curls are one to one and one-half inches closer to scalp than many types of permanents and the final result can hardly be told from naturally curly hair.

Your hair, like your skin, requires proper care and treatment if you wish it to look its glistening best. If you want your hair to look right, and be easily managed, it should receive proper hair shaping. If your hair is tinted or bleached it takes only a little extra care to keep it looking natural.

It takes 3 to 10 years of practical beauty work to become an expert hair dresser. Our average operator has between 8 and 9 years experience. For the last 15 years we have given many, many thousands of permanents each year, so it is just natural that we would have more knowledge of permanent waving than someone who gives one or two permanents a week—Got a hair problem? Go to Ragsdale Beauty Shop.

P.S.: For the best hair results get Professional treatment as often as you can, and give yourself the best possible home care. . . . A professional permanent wave or hair style will improve your appearance and morale more than any other one thing can possibly do. . . . When you do get a professional permanent wave (and you will) go to a Ragsdale Beauty Shop.

All the softened flattery and graceful lines of the latest hair fashions. You will love that "extra-something" in this fashionable hair-do. A hair style that can have a "brushed look" for casual hours, or the dressed-up look for party-going. Our SNAP CURL Creme-Oil cold wave is the secret of its success. HAWK WATCH -o- Serial Story

Minister Relaxes and Explains Some of Anson's and Diana's Background

By Brandon Bird

CHAPTER 14.

REV. MR. GAIRDNER took a deep pull on his pipe but it was dead. "Picture, if you can, this bitter boy. The one thing he had ever loved — his mother — gone. First, taken from him by this tall stranger and now irrevocably lost. I feared he would resent the infant, feeling she had been the cause of Belle's death but he didn't. As soon as it was possible, he and Cricket brought the little thing back home to raise and—would you believe it—Anson seemed to transfer his affections to the child, partly I suppose because she was all he had left of his mother. There Dana was raised, up on that wild mountain by her half brother Anson and old Cricket, who is a well-meaning soul dedicated to all Metcalfs, past and present, and I think she'd lay down her life for Young Anson."

"So the girl's name is Dana Harrison," I said.

"No," he said, stretching, "Harrison is her father's first name. She is Dana Purcell."

It almost jolted me off my chair.

My mind was chewing at something. Dana Purcell. Harrison—"Harrison Dana Purcell?" I said. "Is that it? The NATO deputy?"

He nodded. "Made a career of the diplomatic service," he said. "He was here to see me last spring—about Dana. After Belle's death he tried to keep in touch with the baby—money, birthday presents, that sort of thing. You may ask why he hadn't reared the child. Remember, there he was, alone, stunned by the loss of his wife. Rather than put the baby with strangers it seemed logical that she should be raised on the Metcalf place—you know, family servants, the half brother. Or so Harrison thought. He didn't know his stepson. Harrison was on a tour of foreign duty and during the war lost touch. He had remarried but it wound up in divorce. All this swept him further from his daughter."

HIS chair creaked as he tilted back.

"I hadn't seen him since the day I read Belle's funeral service. When he turned up here last spring the years had left their mark on him. Not that he still wasn't straight as a ramrod, just as suave, but now his hair was snowy white." He ran his hand over his own smooth pate. "Harrison had always been a bit vain, I thought. Be that as it may, he had received this letter from his daughter that stirred up old emotions. Dana had come across his picture in a magazine and from the middle and last names realized it must be her father. Anson always vehemently refused to discuss her father with her but, being the age when a young girl feels the need of family stability and finding the prospect of having such a colorful father as Harrison Dana Purcell romantic, she wrote him through the State department. Her letter delighted him and as soon as he got back to the States he looked her up."

"That must have been a rather touching thing," I said.

"Unfortunately it was less than happy." He knocked his dead pipe into his coffee dregs. "Harrison came directly here from the Metcalf place. He had been shocked, after his chic diplomatic set to find his daughter 'an untamed barbarian' as he put it. With his deep feeling of the right thing to do, he was consumed with a tardy sense of parental responsibility for this girl. 'There is so much, Yoke,' he said, 'I can and must do for her. Cultural advantages she has missed. I'll show her the world and, above all, get her out of that mouldering place back there in the woods.' He had insisted that she leave with him at once. For the girl it was confusing—she wanted to be with her newly-found father and at the same time couldn't face giving up the life she loved, the place that meant home. Harrison wouldn't admit it, but naturally Dana has a certain affection for Anson.

As for Anson—there'd been a scene. He ordered Harrison off the place under threat of turning loose that black beast he keeps up there like a dragon. Harrison left, stating that he would be back for Dana in October. He left Anson seething, Dana in tears, and he was quite upset himself when he arrived here. I advised him to proceed cautiously but he was determined. He had to be in Europe this summer but will return this fall. He is coming for her and threatens to resort to law if necessary."

"The courts would back him up," I said.

"Yes, but don't lose sight of the human factor. Harrison made me promise to talk to Dana and Anson. I told him I hadn't seen her since I persuaded Anson to send Dana to St. Hilda's hall. She'd stuck it out for three semesters but she'd been miserably unhappy. The head mistress of the hall had kept me posted. I had tried to see her when she came home but Anson made it clear I was not welcome. After Harrison had gone I tried to fulfill my promise. It was no good. Young Anson refused to see me or let me talk to Dana. He's savagely jealous of her. I suppose it follows that, having lost his mother to Harrison, he feels the world is again about to take the only thing he loves. During the summer I've exchanged a letter or two with Harrison at which time he said he had written to Dana telling her when to expect him but had had no replies. He suspects that Anson intercepts his letters to her."

I STOOD up from the table. "A man named Purcell registered at the inn last Saturday."

His head came around and the eyebrows lifted. "Harrison?"

"I don't know."

"Tall, high forehead with abundant hair? A bit dramatic looking, no hat—probably good tweeds?"

"I can't say I've seen him. In fact no one seems to have—since shortly after he checked in."

"If it's Harrison he'd almost certainly have come to see—" Both his hands came around and hit the table with a crash. "What did you say?"

"The state police found his car in the Potomac river yesterday. Up to the time I left the inn, they hadn't found him."

When I got back they still hadn't. I asked my pal behind the desk to let me see Purcell's registration card. The initials were definitely H. D.

Up in my room after lunch, the next move seemed too easy. Get in touch with the hired man and verify the message he'd been given. I wouldn't admit it to myself, but all along it had been a grating note. Not that it had to be anything off-color, arranging to meet an older man in a secluded place, but she was a naive young thing and now I knew he was her father, I felt better—up to a certain part. That part I didn't like.

I PICKED up my phone and asked for the post office.

When they answered I asked if mail went out of their office for the Metcalfs up on Third Hill. The man didn't know the name but he said the RFD in that area came from an office on the other side of the ridge.

I decided the idea was no good anyway. A hired man wouldn't necessarily live on the place. While I had the phone in my hands I tried something else.

"Information? Does Anson Metcalf have a phone?"

There was a pause, then:

"No, sir. There is no phone listed under that name."

"You're sure? That's not in town. It's on Third Hill mountain."

"I've heard of him, sir, but there is no telephone listed." I put the phone in its cradle.

I told myself there was Law, capital L, to take care of this thing. So far, they'd found Harrison Purcell's car. I ought to go to them. I could see myself telling a state police corporal about the thing that was bothering me—a man I'd seen on Spine rocks. Trying to identify someone I'd never seen less than a mile away. And anyway, that was Saturday. They didn't find the car till Monday—nowhere near the rocks.

I stopped stalling and faced it. I didn't want the state police up there working on that girl.

I changed into slacks and a sweater and put on my bush jacket. I wasn't sure about the Leica. Taking it yesterday had been like tying a label on myself. I decided it wouldn't hurt to have it along if I wanted to be the conversational camera amateur for anyone else.

Outside, it was still cold and cloudy. I climbed in the Jaguar and pulled on a pair of pigskin gloves, snapping the straps at my wrists.

Near the crossroads I pulled to a stop by a big shagbark hickory on the edge of a field where a man in an old coat and overalls was sitting, doubled over, on a pile of fodder husking corn.

I climbed out and stepped across a ditch to the fence. He turned to one side and spit at the ground, making a ducking motion with his head like a chicken pecking grain. He didn't nod or acknowledge me but went on husking corn as if he had to meet a due date.

"Do you mind if I take a picture of your cornfield? Those shocks make a nice pattern."

He looked me over and seemed to decide I wasn't kidding him. "Go ahead. Never had no time to fool with pictures myself. Always had somethin' more important to git done."

I went through the routine of focussing and shooting without actually tripping the shutter but it seemed to convince him. After I'd closed the carrying case I leaned on his fence and confided that I'd always thought farmers would be interesting.

WE talked about the chance of rain or whether it would be snow. After we got that off our chests I said, "Yesterday, while I was taking some pictures up on Third Hill mountain, I met a man who said the people he worked for kept falcons. After I left him I wished I'd asked where the place was. I'd like to get some shots of a falcon. Do you know where I could find him?"

"I'd like to get a shot at their hawk but it won't be with no camera."

"You know the man I mean?"

"Anson Metcalf who has them hawks."

"Do you know the help up there?" I asked.

"Ought to," he grunted. "Lived in this valley all my life."

He examined the unhusked ear in his hand. "Someone's been kidding you, mister. There ain't been any hands hired on that place since Anson Metcalf took over. Or any work done, neither. They used to be good fields up there that's growed to woods now. Anything gits done there is done by old Cricket an' she's past amountin' to anything."

As I drove away he was still sneering pleasantly. I couldn't tell if it was at me or at the weather.

Up on Third Hill at the old brick gate post I pulled to the side of the paved road without blocking Anson Metcalf's entrance. I decided to leave the Leica in the rear compartment.

I wished I didn't have to go on foot but the Englishmen who build Jaguars never see roads like this. I found a nice thick section of a branch that had blown out of a tree, lying in the ditch. I picked it up and tested it but it was rotten. Further on I found one that would beat a man's brains out. I hoped it would work on Dobermans.

THERE'S something about this time of year even low-moving clouds and cold wind can't spoil. I think it's the color and the way you're suspended in it that does things to you.

Then a sound got through to me and I realized I must have been hearing it for some time. Just to be on the safe side, I stepped behind a tree trunk, though I was certain it would be Dana even before the car came around the turn of the lane.

It was an oldish car that sagged considerably on the driver's side and there was a fresh spattering of water from the deep ruts in the lane darkening the coat of mud along its flanks. I was on the driver's side of the road but I couldn't see the man behind the wheel till he came even with me, though from the beating the springs were taking I could tell he had a lot of weight to him. Then I saw the drooping cloth hat, the shaggy brows and the large blade nose. The slightly soiled parson's collar looked too tight and the massive face was the deep, dull red of a setting sun on a hazy day. L. Yoke Gairdner wasn't smiling.

He slammed on the brakes, the car slithered through a puddle and the engine went dead with a gurgle that sounded like a sigh of relief.

Screen Version of 'Oklahoma!' Completed

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 25—After 107 days of shooting at a total cost of $5,960,000 the screen version of "Oklahoma!" was completed this month. The musical produced by Arthur Hornblow and directed by Fred Zinnemann is one of the lengthiest and costliest made. It is planned to release it next spring.

Despite the title, the film version of the Rodgers and Hammerstein Broadway hit went before the Todd-A-O cameras in Nogales, Ariz., on July 14. "Oklahoma just doesn't look like the Oklahoma of 1907 any more," Producer Hornblow said, explaining why the film was shot in Arizona.

The moviemakers even planted 10 acres of corn a year in advance of production at their location site so it would be "high as an elephant's eye" by the starting date.

Though hampered by adverse weather, the company was on location in Arizona for seven weeks and returned to the M.-G.-M. studios on Sept. 7. The book section was completed Oct. 28 and the final dance number, one of four choreographed by Agnes De Mille, was finished early this month.

The "Oklahoma" stars included Shirley Jones, Charlotte Greenwood, Gordon MacRae, Gloria Grahame, Gene Nelson, Eddie Albert, Rod Steiger, James Whitmore, Barbara Lawrence, Jay C. Flippen and Roy Barcroft.

Of Barrie's 'What Every Woman Knows'

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (AP)—The appealing voice of Helen Hayes combined with the fact that she can convince you that she can do anything for a man she loves—wash a shirt or fry an egg sandwich—should be convincing enough that she is a great actress. And especially so when she plays in a new version of the Sir James M. Barrie play, "What Every Woman Knows," which opened at the New York City Center Theater this week.

In "What Every Woman Knows" Miss Hayes is Maggie Wylie, a Scotch girl with much in her heart but rather plain looking on the outside. She has few hopes of catching a man, but she is more romantic than Elizabeth Barrett Browning. And she has persistence.

An opportunity arrives when John Shand, a man handsome and with vigor, is trapped when he breaks into the house of Maggie Wylie. She has justifiable complaint because he is a lawbreaker. Shand has the excuse that he has broken into the house because he wants to read books in her library. He wants to improve his education.

Helen Hayes is an actress with authority, a lady on the stage. Kent Smith and John Cromwell match her with quality performances.

Striped Blouses

Blouses made of striped fabric that looks like men's silk shirting are highlighted among the interesting types that have a new appearance. One candy striped shirtwaist combining pink and white has a tailored collar and three-quarter length push-up sleeves. A green and white short-sleeved model also is attractive.

Cleaning Up House After Big Holiday

By Dorothy Brainerd

HOUSES which were put into such ship-shape order for Christmas have a way of being a shambles the day after the big holiday, so here are a few suggestions which may help you bring order out of chaos.

In this imperfect world even such a lovely thing as a Christmas tree brings with it problems as well as pleasure. Those tiny bits of broken Christmas tree balls are almost impossible to pick up unless you go after them with dampened cotton; use a magnet to remove any metal pieces which may remain. A dampened cake of soap will do a neat job of picking up broken bits of glass; just shave off the outside layer of soap and away go the slivers of glass.

If your best table linen is now decorated with candlewax drippings, scrape off the hardened wax from the surface of the cloth gently with a dull knife, then sponge the stain with cleaning fluid as you would treat any grease spot. If any traces of color are left, they usually can be removed by sponging with a cloth dipped in a mixture of two parts water to one part rubbing alcohol.

You probably want to freshen up your tablecloth before using it again. For lightly soiled linens a three to four-minute wash in your washer should be sufficient; if the cloth is badly soiled, give it five to eight minutes. White cottons or linens should be washed in hot water not less than 140 degrees F.; use only warm water (120 degrees F.) for colors; lukewarm water (100 degrees F.) for rayon or acetate blends.

If your cloth has delicate cut-out work or sheer lace inserts, better place it in a mesh bag for protection.

"I WOULD like to know if there is any way to repair an expensive nylon net formal without having the repair too conspicuous," writes Mrs. W.J.B. "The tear is about six inches in length, and is in the top skirt of the nylon net."

It is almost impossible to answer this question intelligently without seeing the garment, Mrs. B. Nylon net is very difficult to re-weave. However, you might be able to rip some of the threads (perhaps from the hem or the inside of a seam) and darn the tear with them. If the skirt is very full and gathered, it might be less conspicuous to cut out the tear and replace this portion of the net.

Since you say the dress was an expensive one, it might be advisable to take it to a good dressmaker and obtain her opinion after examining the garment.

JUST A NOTE OF THANKS to the many readers who were nice enough to take time right before Christmas to send in cookie recipes which they felt might be the one Mrs. R.O.P. of Lemay was seeking.

Some of these homemakers explained that these were old family recipes. All were sent to Mrs. P. prior to Christmas, and we are sure she would join us in our appreciation.

"I HAVE a small portable oven which has several rust spots. Is there some way to remove them, or could the oven be painted? And if so, what kind of paint should be used?" inquires Mrs. V. S., Venice, Ill.

"Also, where can I buy a rubber gasket for around the refrigerator door?"

Remove all possible rust from the oven by rubbing vigorously with dry steel wool or a steel brush made for use on suede shoes. Then take a dry cloth and wipe thoroughly before baking in the oven. If it is to be stored away, cover the rusted spots with fat or oil.

The outside of the oven could be painted with a heat-resisting enamel, but there is no paint which could be applied satisfactorily to the inside.

The rubber gasket may be purchased from the distributor who handles the particular brand of refrigerator which you are using. Consult the telephone directory for location.

MRS. J. R. INQUIRES: "Can you tell me how to make outside wooden steps less slippery when wet? Is there any outdoor sandpaint or practical sand and tar combination that could be used for this purpose?"

Yes, there is, Mrs. R. Paint the steps with ordinary porch and deck enamel. While the paint is still damp, sprinkle with dry sand. A sifter is excellent for this operation. The paint will absorb the sand and color it if it is applied while the paint is still wet.

Any homemaking problems bothering you? If so, write to Dorothy Brainerd in care of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. She will answer your questions, or publish them and see if other readers have the answers for you.

Gay Skirts

Gaily striped skirts are rivaling tweed patterns as the new fashions for 1955 begin to arrive in the stores. Some of the skirts are made of silk while others combine wool and orlon. Shades vary from brilliant ones to the more neutral mixtures of brown and beige.

Miss Cowdry Presented At Party

A CHRISTMAS day debutante, Miss Margaret Hanford Cowdry was presented to society yesterday by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Edmund Vincent Cowdry of the Ellington apartments, at the Junior League tearoom.

Annually the Cowdrys give a Christmas eggnog party. This year arrangements were more elaborate, additional guests were invited, and the occasion became their daughter's coming-out party.

The debutante and her parents stood at a tall tree trimmed with gay ornaments, tinsel and multi-colored lights between the front windows. Miss Cowdry wore a floor-length white net gown, the lace overskirt patterned in silver tracery; the strapless bodice tightly fitted. A long white net stole encircled her shoulders. Her flowers, red carnations and lilies of the valley, were arranged in an old-fashioned nosegay tied with silver. Mrs. Cowdry's dress was soft blue faille, street length, with which she wore a corsage of holiday greens.

Red candles lighted the eggnog table and pine boughs provided decoration in the entrance. On the west wall a

Miss LoPiccolo Makes Debut at Christmas Ball

A CHRISTMAS ball last night served to introduce to society Miss Joanne LoPiccolo, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Vincent L. LoPiccolo. The coming-out party was given at the LoPiccolo home, 7100 Delmar boulevard, University City, which was decorated with a profusion of holiday greens, red poinsettias and red satin bows.

Guests entering the spacious hall were greeted by a live Santa Claus, Edward Dolan, a close friend of the family, before a ceiling-high Christmas tree. They were received before the living room fireplace which was banked with red poinsettias. Greenery tied with red ribbon decorated the walls and a strolling accordionist played Christmas songs. Candles in sconces and candelabra provided illumination.

The stairway leading to the third floor ballroom was garlanded with pine boughs accented with red bows while the ballroom itself was bedecked with pine roping tied at intervals with red.

In the dining room the two buffet tables were covered with white satin and adorned with silver epergnes holding red poinsettias and silver candelabra with lighted red tapers. On the dessert table stood a gingerbread house and tiny Santa Clauses.

The small supper tables, covered in the white satin, were placed in the billiard and sun rooms and centered with hurricane lamps shielding red candles and set in greenery.

Miss LoPiccolo wore a white Italian silk gown embroidered with medallions of rhinestones, paillettes and iridescents. An apron of the material fell over the full skirt front, and in back two poufs suggesting a bustle extended into a train. The debutante carried red poinsettias.

Mrs. LoPiccolo chose a satin sheath gown in a delicate peach shade with a halter neckline. The bodice was encrusted with pearls, gold beads and rhinestones and the line of the skirt was softened with panniers. In her hair she pinned a gold cymbidium orchid.

Assisting the LoPiccolos were Gen. (ret.) and Mrs. Percy Carroll, Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Kinsella, Mr. and Mrs. Cicardi Bruce and Mr. and Mrs. George Sory.

Carole May Lynch Becomes Bride Of M. G. Basford

A MILITARY WEDDING in the chapel of Scott Air Force Base in Belleville, Ill., was that of Miss Carole May Lynch and Ens. Michael Gordon Basford of the Navy, Monday afternoon, Dec. 20. For the candlelight service the altar was decorated with baskets of white chrysanthemums and sprays of greenery and flanked with wrought iron floor standards holding tall tapers. The Rev. Nash Geany, Air Force chaplain, officiated at the double ring ceremony. More candles, arranged on alternate pews, marked the center aisle.

Miss Karen Lynch was maid of honor for her sister. They are daughters of Coast Guard Capt. Gilbert I. Lynch and Mrs. Lynch of 7939 Delmar boulevard, University City. Bridesmaids were Miss Becky Miller of Kirksville, Mo., and Mrs. William Johnson (Dorothy Bergner) of Kansas City, Mo., sorority sisters of the bride.

They wore red silk taffeta afternoon dresses and carried white ermine muffs on which were attached sprays of holly, except for the maid of honor who held a colonial bouquet of red and white carnations. The skirts fell full over crinoline with extra fullness in the back topped by a large bustle bow. In their hair they wore bands of white ermine.

The bride was gowned in chantilly lace and tulle over satin. The basque bodice was styled with a sweetheart neckline outlined in scalloped lace embroidered with pearls. In the bouffant lace skirt were panels of tiny pleated nylon tulle ruffles. The silk tulle veil was secured to a tiny circlet of orange blossoms.

Best man for the bridegroom was Ens. William Perry of West Virginia. The ushers, in full dress uniforms, were Ens. Robert W. Scott of Denver, Ens. Patrick McNenny of Cleveland and Ens. Donald Loring of Milwaukee. The ushers, best man and Ens. Basford are at present undergoing flight training at the Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla. As they left the chapel, the newly married couple passed under an arch of drawn swords.

A reception was given after the ceremony in the Cardinal room of the Officers' Club which was decorated with red poinsettias and white chrysanthemums. Grill work intertwined with laurel served as a background for the receiving line. The Air Force Band at Scott Field played for dancing in the lounge of the club. Later Ens. Basford and his bride left by plane for a wedding trip to Nassau. When they return they will live in Pensacola.

Ens. Basford was graduated last June from the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Chesterfield Basford who came here from their home in La Mesa, Calif., for the occasion. The former Miss Lynch and her bridesmaids attended the University of Missouri where they were members of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

MRS. JASON T. WEISSENBURGER

MRS. ROBERT LOUIS ROSENFELD

Candlelight Wedding For Miss Lynn Gast, J. T. Weissenburger II

LIGHTED white tapers against banks of Christmas trees in the sanctuary of Union avenue Christian Church provided a holiday setting for the wedding Wednesday night of Miss Lynn Gast and Jason Ticknor Weissenburger II. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Hampton Adams of Park Avenue Christian Church, New York, former pastor of Union Avenue Christian Church.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Frederick Gast, 6110 Garesche boulevard, was given in marriage by her father. Miss Kay Lucy Hammond was maid of honor, and the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. Randolph Vanet; Miss Peggy Gwynn and Miss June Lyon were bridesmaids. Mr. Weissenburger, son of Mrs. Annabelle Weissenburger, 7269 Delmar boulevard, University City, and Jason T. Weissenburger of Erie, Pa., had Oscar Perry Hampton III as best man. Ushers were Robert Frank Quinn, A. Craig Schewe, Donald J. Brandes, Andrew Trevor Smith, Hugh M. Crull and the bride's brother, Lt. David Polk Gast of El Paso, Texas.

The wedding gown of ivory silk satin was cut on princess lines with an off-shoulder neckline, edged with alencon lace, and long fitted sleeves. The bouffant skirt, over crinoline, spread into a train. The bride wore a long tulle veil gathered to an orange blossom wreath and carried a bouquet of white roses. Her attendants were in white crystallette waltz-length gowns tied at the waists with red velvet sashes ending in streamers at hemlines. They wore holly wreaths in their hair and carried bouquets of scarlet poinsettias.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Gast gave a reception at Glen Echo Country Club, which was decorated in a traditional Christmas theme.

Mr. and Mrs. Weissenburger have taken an apartment at 7002 Pershing avenue, and after the holidays both will resume their studies at Washington University, where Mr. Weissenburger is a senior in the engineering school.

Rabbi J. J. Gittleman performed the ceremony in a setting of pink gladiolas and carnations with a background of eucalyptus leaves.

The bride wore a waltz-length re-embroidered chantilly lace gown with a wide satin cummerbund. Her fingertip veil was held by a small satin and lace cap edged with seed pearls. She held a white Bible marked with white orchids and stephanotis.

Miss Barbara Sue Levine was her sister's maid of honor and Miss Karole Joyce Rosenfeld, sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Terry Ann Marks, cousin of the bride, were bridesmaids. Their gowns, fashioned of French blue velvet and pale blue chiffon, were worn with velvet headpieces. They carried French bouquets.

Recent Bride

MRS. JAMES B. HERSHFELT

Lila Ann Dodge Becomes Bride

THE wedding of Miss Lila Ann Dodge, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dodge, 328 East Big Bend road, Webster Groves, and Army Lt. James Browning Hershfelt was an event of Monday night at First Congregational Church in Webster Groves. The Rev. Ervine P. Inglis officiated at the service in a setting of Christmas greenery, white chrysanthemums and gladiolas. Greenery was entwined around lighted tapers down the center aisle.

Alencon lace and nylon tulle over satin fashioned the bride's gown. The bateau neckline of the molded lace bodice was studded with pearls and French iridescent sequins. Triangular appliques of lace fell from the waistline into the bouffant tulle skirt which ended in a train. A pearl-studded Juliet cap held her short tulle veil. The former Miss Dodge carried a crescent bouquet of white roses centered with a white orchid touched with variegated holly.

Mrs. Bryce Hastings (Mary Burkett) served as matron of honor and Miss Judy Conrad, as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Joan Halbman and Miss Judy Lorenz, Delta Gamma sorority sisters of the bride.

The young women were dressed in Dior blue faille ballerina frocks with sweetheart necklines and matching blue velvet bandeaux with red veils as headdresses. Red roses and holly were attached to the blue velvet muffs they carried. James K. Rogers was best man for the bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Hershfelt, 25 Woodcrest, Ladue. Ushers were Constantine Pulos, Paul L. Robertson and Robert Winkler.

At the reception at Le Chateau, Mrs. Dodge greeted her guests in a rose lace dress with a bateau neckline edged in pearls. She had a corsage of rose-colored cymbidium orchids. Mrs. Hershfelt, mother of the bridegroom, wore a floor-length gown of navy blue lace and her corsage was of beige cymbidium orchids.

The newly-married pair will spend a few days in Chicago and will return to St. Louis to spend Christmas with their families. After the first of the year Lt. Hershfelt will report to Camp Kilmer, N.J., before leaving for Germany. His bride will join him after she completes her senior year at Washington University. Lt. Hershfelt, a graduate of Washington's Business School, is a member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity, of which he was president his senior year.

AIR FORCE UNIT 'RIDES FENCES' TO CHECK RADAR

Planes Make Flights to See How Much Area Warning System Takes in.

HILL AIR FORCE BASE, Utah, Dec. 25 (AP)—Like cowboys riding fence, a team of flyers at Hill Air Force Base goes out almost daily to check the invisible radar fence that helps guard the United States against air attack.

The mission of the 4677th Radar Evaluation Flight was disclosed in Washington by the Air Force. The unit has been stationed at Hill, near Ogden, for about a year. There are only two others like it in the country—one at Hamilton Air Force Base, Calif., and one at Griffis Air Force Base, N.Y.

Maj. James A. Gerwick, Hill unit commander, says, "I think the best way to express it is that we try to determine radar coverage. We need to know just how much territory our radar network takes in."

To do this job, Gerwick has nine airplanes in his flight—seven B-29s, one B-25 and one C-47.

His men "ride fence" for the Central Air Defense area, which includes 28 states in the middle of the country and stretches from Mexico to Canada.

The radar testers fly around the clock, winter and summer, going out beyond the border and then swinging back through the network.

In winter they buck northern blizzards and ice, and in summer they dodge southwestern thunderstorms.

"We don't have to look for bad weather to make the tests effective," Gerwick said. "We generally find it anyway."

Because of the huge area he has to cover, Gerwick usually sends out one plane at a time.

Ordinarily the pilot doesn't know whether he has been spotted by radar until he returns to base. By checking his known course and position against radar spottings made at the same time, Air Force officers can tell whether the radar tester has been picked up.

But sometimes Gerwick sends up planes unannounced. "Then we try to come in as an unknown," he said. "When we do, interceptors investigate us immediately."

At other times, the flight must work closely with the radar people on the ground. "For example," Gerwick said, "if we're testing a new piece of radar equipment, we let the ground people know exactly what we're doing, and we send a team to work with them at the radar site."

"It's considered a worthwhile mission," he said, "and that usually makes people pretty well satisfied. We feel we're doing something important."

'55 MARCH OF DIMES ALMOST READY TO GO

Drive Starts Jan. 3—Results of Mail Campaign Called Encouraging.

Preparations in the St. Louis area are nearly complete for the 1955 March of Dimes, scheduled to start Jan. 3, Postmaster Bernard F. Dickmann, general St. Louis chairman of the drive for funds to fight polio, said yesterday.

A mail appeal for contributions already has been made and first returns are encouraging, Dickmann said.

"But we've got a bigger job to do now," he added. "The 1955 March of Dimes must raise enough money to see the polio vaccine project through to successful completion. At the same time we must provide for many thousands of polio-stricken children and adults now fighting for recovery."

The vaccine project he mentioned is the Salk trial vaccine, which Dickmann said "offers bright prospects for eventually conquering polio."

"We don't know yet whether the trial vaccine actually can protect a single child from paralysis," he added. "If the evaluation shows it does, we will make 9,000,000 vaccinations available this year. To do this will cost a lot of money but it will be money joyfully spent."

March of Dimes headquarters has been opened in the Rialto Building, 220 North Fourth street. It will be an information center and meeting place for volunteer campaign workers. The drive will continue through January.

PIANIST MALCOLM FRAGER TO GIVE RECITAL TUESDAY

Pianist Malcolm Frager, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred M. Frager, 8145 Balsom avenue, University City, will give a recital Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. at Sheldon Auditorium, 3648 Washington boulevard. His program will include Bach preludes and fugues, sonatas by Beethoven and Chopin and works of Schumann and Rachmaninoff.

Frager, who made his debut at New York's Town Hall two years ago, when he was 17 years old, has been studying in New York with Carl Friedberg, who was a pupil of Clara Schumann. He has been soloist here at student concerts of the St. Louis Symphony, with the Little Symphony and on the Artist Presentation series. He has studied at the Conservatoire Americain at Fontainbleau, France, and at the Vienna Conservatory.

SYMPHONY TO PLAY AT BUSINESS FIRM

Series of Noon-Hour Concerts for Employes to Begin Tuesday.

The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will move, full strength, into the Edison Brothers Stores, Inc., office at 315 Washington avenue Tuesday to play the first of a new series of noon-hour concerts for employes of industrial plants and business firms in the area.

An innovation with the orchestra, now in its seventy-fifth anniversary season, the concerts are designed to acquaint St. Louis area employes with the orchestra, its conductor and the type of music for which they are widely known.

Practically a full complement of instruments and equipment will be moved into the offices of the company. Edison Brothers employes will be allowed to eat lunch at their desks while they listen to the concert.

The office employes will be closer to the orchestra than it is possible to get at Kiel Auditorium Opera House, it was pointed out.

A variety of types of music will be included in the noon-hour concerts, it was announced. The progrm for Edison Brothers employes will include the Beethoven "Egmont" overture; the Bizet "Carmen" suite; Schumann's "Traumerei"; a Boccherini minuet; Rodgers's "Surrey With the Fringe on Top"; De-Falla's "LaVida Breve," and the Wagner "Tannhauser" overture.

Similar concerts are being planned by the Symphony Society to provide lunch-hour entertainment with the hope they will cultivate more appreciation for good music.

GIRL SCOUT TROOP 23 WILL TOUR CITY HALL

30 Members to Visit Mayor and a Session of Civil Court.

Thirty members of Girl Scout Troop 23 will tour City Hall Wednesday through arrangement with the Mayor's office. They are to earn the "My Government" proficiency badges.

The group will spend the day visiting the offices of Mayor Raymond R. Tucker and other administrative officials, and will sit in on a session in Civil Court.

Mrs. Charles I. Linhart and Mrs. Edward Carroll are leaders of the troop, which meets at Buder School, 5319 Lansdowne avenue.

Girl Scouts who attended members of the camp staff have been invited to a rally and reunion at 2 p.m., Wednesday, at Scottish Rite Cathedral, 3637 Lindell boulevard. More than 860 girls attended sessions.

A council-wide basic course for prospective Brownie and Intermediate troop leaders will begin Jan. 7 from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., at Y.M.H.A., 724 Union boulevard. Sessions will continue Jan. 21 and 28, and Feb. 4 and 11.

Free tickets to the Silver Skates show for Girl Scouts can be obtained by leaders and neighborhood chairmen by sending requests to the local council, 505 North Seventh street, in care of Miss Florence McCarty. The show will be held at 2 p.m., Jan. 9.

Steven Fredman, 7100 Wydown boulevard, Clayton, will receive the Eagle rank at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at a Court of Honor of Explorer Post 87 at United Hebrew Temple, 225 South Skinker boulevard. Stanley Goldberg, 6313 South Rosebury avenue, Clayton, will be presented the Silver award.

Explorer Post 365 is being organized by the Ferguson Junior High School Parent-Teacher's Association, which also sponsors a Boy Scout troop. John R. Knibb, 21 Tiffin avenue, will be advisor or unit leader and Earl Bartareau, 210 Risdon drive, his assistant.

Robert L. Formoe, 1022 Breckenridge avenue, St. Ann, has been appointed to the recently created position of assistant Scout executive. The appointment was part of realignment and enlarging the professional staff of the St. Louis Boy Scout council and making personnel changes, effective Jan. 1.

Formoe, who has served as Scout executive of West district for more than three years, will be succeeded in that office by Donald A. Davison, Scout executive of South district. The South district vacancy will be filled temporarily by Wayne E. Nelson, assistant field director.

Scout Executive Jack J. Keith said the council's field service department will be realigned into North and South divisions instead of City and County divisions, beginning Jan. 1.

Three new members have been appointed to the finance committee. They are Arthur K. Atkinson, president of the Wabash Railroad; Tom J. Connelly, vice president of Krupnich & Associates, and Louis B. Eckelkamp, owner of Diamonds Restaurant.

A new procedure has been adopted for review of applications for unit leaders, Commissioner's training keys, Scouter's awards and Arrowhead Honor awards. Beginning Jan. 1, applications must be submitted at least 60 days before the date set for presentation to the training department at the council office, 505 Chemical Building.

Applications should be sent with supporting material required under the three-year training program of Boy Scouts of America.

Scoutleaders this week will take the first two steps in a plan to increase the pace at which new units are being organized. The first involves expansion of the organization and extension committee in each of the 19 districts to 10 men each before Friday. The second step involves listing all present and potential sponsors for units in each district before Jan. 10.

HOLIDAY DRESSES

THE GAYEST SOCIAL SEASON of the year for St. Louis debutantes occurs during the Christmas holiday period. The young people who attend out-of-town schools are home, the mood by tradition is festive, and engagement calendars are full. For the two weeks ending on January 3 there is a constant round of parties, balls, teas and other social affairs, including debuts. At such a time as this, party dresses, of course, are very important. Their pastel hues, filmy fabrics, and flaring lines provide an eye-catching addition to the holiday decorations. For the debutante the gown is a highlight of the party, deserving a lot of time, attention and comment. Girls like to get together to discuss and admire their holiday dresses, as the group of debutantes shown on this page is doing. Crowded around a mirror in the Henry Belz home at 53 Portland place, they are having their own style show, each combining the role of model and audience member. Before the mirror are, from left: Elizabeth Ann McDonald, wearing a blush pink portrait gown of chiffon velvet bodice and tulle skirt; Anne Grant Smith (seated), in bouffant skirt of white tulle over shell pink and tulle bodice with embroidered beaded flower design; Nancy Wade Jones, daughter of Mrs. Belz, whose gown with satin bodice and full tulle skirt is garlanded with velvet leaves; Marian Croxton Green, wearing white tulle with fuchsia velvet belt and bodice covered with iridescent paillettes, and Josephine Arnold White in pale rose satin bodice fashioned into a polonaise over pink tulle skirt.

THE HARASSED POST OFFICE

4,000,000 Parcels in Christmas Avalanche

THIS IS A SMALL PART of the avalanche of Christmas parcel post that swamped the main St. Louis post office this year. A seemingly endless pile of packages cascades down a gigantic slide from a conveyor in the rear. On reaching bottom, the parcels are sorted according to destination. Almost lost in the mass of boxes are five clerks, literally up to their necks in work. The photo was made last Monday during the height of the mail rush.

Several thousand packages, all outgoing, are included in this view of a section of the parcel post department at the main post office. There 686 clerks labored mightily sorting and distributing more than 4,000,000 parcels in the annual crush of holiday mail that continued right up to Christmas. Postal officials reported it was one of the largest volumes of mail ever handled here.

"It took two weeks to dig out from under that mountain," exclaimed one armweary clerk. "I'm sure glad to see the floor again!"

TROUBLE OVER CYPRUS

Greeks Riot Against Americans and British in Demand for Island

Rioting Athenian students converge on a fire truck called by police to help stem the mob with fire hoses. One rioter (center) swings a club at a crewman on the side of the truck. In an hour-long melee police were unable to control the demonstrators, but the outbreak quickly ended when hoses from two trucks were turned on the students. Forty-one students and 16 police were injured in the clash. The Greek government apologized for the anti-American outbreak, but also issued a statement denouncing the American position on Cyprus.

By OLIVER F. FINK of the PICTURES Staff

THE DEMAND BY GREECE that it be given the island of Cyprus, a British colony, has resulted in outbursts of anti-American and anti-British rioting in Greece and on the island. In Athens, some 4000 Greeks fought police with bricks and wood clubs in an effort to reach the American Embassy, were finally dispersed with fire hoses. In a five-hour fight with police, students at Salonika burned a picture of President Eisenhower, stormed the United States Information Agency and burned the film library, tried to storm the American and British consulates. On Cyprus a riot at Nicosia was broken up with tear gas. At Limassol, Cyprus, police lost control of the mobs and British troops moved in, opened fire and wounded three persons in a melee on the main square. Altogether, scores of persons were injured, many arrested in the widespread outbreaks.

Cyprus is near the coast of Turkey in the eastern Mediterranean. Since antiquity it has been under frequently changing foreign rule, including Turkey, but it has never been a Greek possession. However, about three-fourths of its approximately 500,000 population are Greek, most of the rest are Turkish.

The Greek Cypriots have long been vociferous in support of Greece's demands for "enosis" or union. The latest outburst of violence was touched off by Britain's refusal to grant the Greek demands and by the United States support of Britain's stand in the United Nations. During the 1954 session of the U.N. General Assembly, a Greek move to bring up the issue of "self-determination" for Cyprus was shelved.

Headed by a Greek Orthodox priest, massed demonstrators march through a street of Athens. They carry improvised placards and banners bearing the word "enosis" and anti-British and anti-American slogans. Among the sentiments expressed were "Shame to the Americans for deserting their honored traditions," and "We prefer declared enemies to treacherous friends." The Greeks on Cyprus belong to the Independent Cypriote Church, a branch of the (Greek) Orthodox Eastern Church. The Turks are Moslems. Cyprus belonged to Turkey from 1573 to 1914, when it was annexed by Britain after Turkey sided with Germany in World War I.

As the demonstrators start gathering at the University of Athens, students form a human pyramid as a "soap box" for one of their number. The later violence centered largely on an Athens building housing several American government missions. A number of windows were broken.

CANAPES ADD a gay and decorative touch to holiday entertaining, but they often suffer from becoming dry before the end of the party. Mrs. Lester Carl Dobruns of Glendale makes a canape pie that remains fresh and inviting, and can be stored in the deep freezer for unexpected guests.

Mrs. Dobruns prepares five different fillings, one of them an egg mixture used to form divisions of color between the other four. These are spread in circular bands on thick slices of rye bread. A round 14-ounce loaf of bread, minus the top and bottom crusts, makes four slices of the desired thickness and roundness. These should be spread with softened butter before the fillings are put on. The canape pie should be wrapped in foil paper for freezing, and thawed at room temperature. Makes 48 wedges.

INGREDIENTS: One 14-ounce loaf rye bread, one four-ounce jar stuffed olives, margarine or butter for spreading bread. For the fillings—Number 1, two hard-cooked egg yolks, one tablespoon butter, one teaspoon lemon juice, few grains sugar, salt and pepper to taste and enough mayonnaise to thin for use in decorating tube. Number 2, three three-and-one-fourth-ounce cans deviled ham, two tablespoons mayonnaise, one-half teaspoon prepared mustard, one teaspoon catsup. Number 3, one two-ounce can black caviar, one tablespoon lemon juice, two tablespoons grated onion. Number 4, either two small cans (three-and-one-fourth-ounces each) liver spread or one-fourth pound braunschweiger, two tablespoons mayonnaise, pinch oregano, Worcestershire sauce to taste. Number 5, six ounces Philadelphia cream cheese, one-half cup chopped nuts, five tablespoons chopped chives, cream or top milk to thin for spreading.

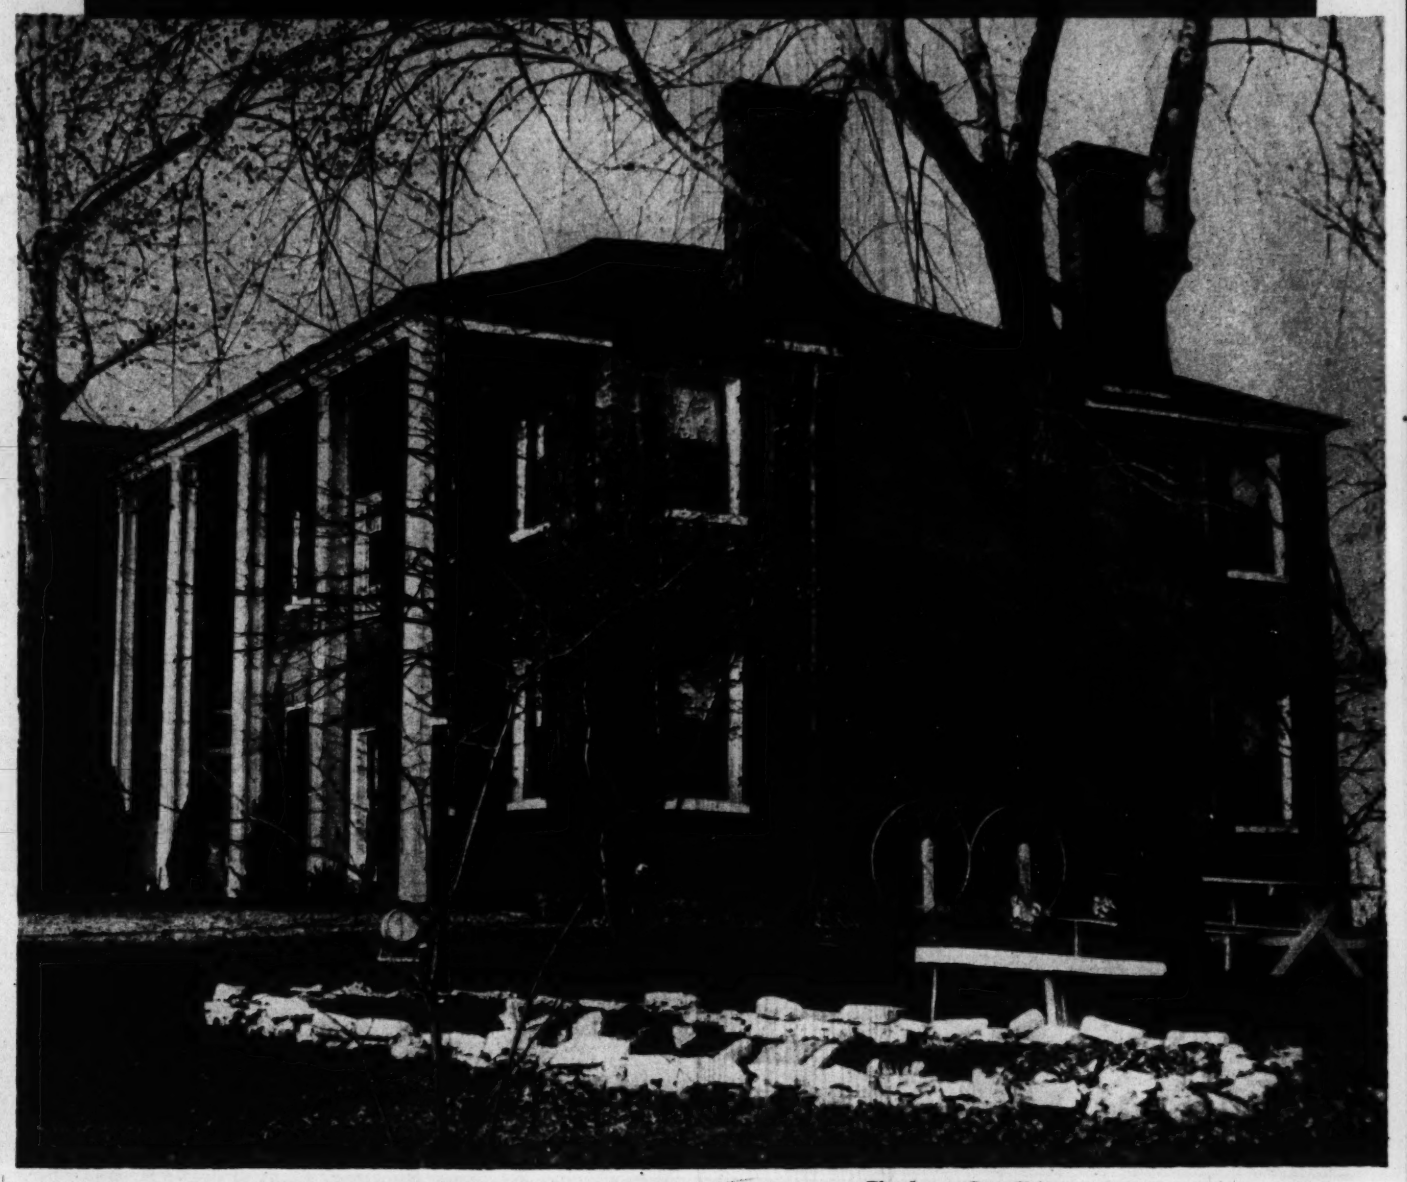
EARLY ST. LOUIS HOUSES

Only a Few Remain From Area's Pioneer Days of a Century or More Ago

White Haven, on Grant road near Gravois road, has south wing (left) that was built as log cabin sometime after 1796. Main part of house, with porches that are a modification of Southern plantation style, was built of oak and walnut in 1808 by slave labor. White Haven was name of ancestral home in England of Frederick Dent, who bought the property in 1821. Dent's daughter, Julia, married Ulysses S. Grant. After becoming President, Grant bought the property, later lost it. Delbert Wenzlick, whose father purchased it in 1913, and his wife now occupy the house.

This early nineteenth century home at 289 St. Denis street in Florissant was built by General Augustin Alvarez, adjutant of the last Spanish Governor of the Upper Louisiana Territory. Original structure of white oak and black walnut logs was later covered with weatherboarding. Visible at left and in right background are more recent additions. Mrs. Herman von Schrenk is present owner-occupant.



The Lewis Bissell home, as it is called, at 4426 Randall place, off North Broadway. It was built by Bissell in 1830 in the Federal style of architecture, popular at the time. House is on bluffs overlooking the Mississippi River near what is known as Bissell's Point. Porch once had an upper deck. At left is an addition to the original building. The entire structure has been divided into apartments; one of them is occupied by Miss Mildred Burns, present owner of the property.

THE PASSAGE OF TIME has taken heavy toll of houses built in St. Louis more than 100 years ago. Only about two dozen residences of the first half of the nineteenth century are known to be standing inside the city limits. There are more than that—exactly how many is not known—in St. Louis County. But of all of these houses more than a century old, those that were built before Missouri was admitted to the Union in 1821 can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

There are no homes still standing in either city or county that were built before 1800. The last of these souvenirs, constructed within 40 years after St. Louis was first laid out as a town in 1764, was torn down in July, 1875. That pioneer house was located on the corner of Third and Plum streets.

A number of houses built in the city in the immediate decades after 1800 were destroyed by the great fire of 1849, which burned out most of St. Louis' downtown section. Since then other houses of this era, most of them built along or close to the riverfront, have disappeared for various reasons—the spread of business and factory construction, widening of old streets and the building of new ones, and, of course, downright neglect. Such forces have not been so telling in the county.

Eight of the city and county houses that are more than a century old are shown in these photographs. They were selected for various reasons—for their architecture, for the type of construction or because they are still imposing evidences of early wealth. Historical interest also played a part: Important people built some of the houses, owned them or lived in them.

Several of the structures reflect great care in their preservation. These contrast sharply with others that, long vacant, are rotting away, condemned, or soon to be destroyed.

Dr. William Swekowsky, St. Louis dentist and an authority on the city's old buildings, and Charles Van Ravenswaay, director of the Missouri Historical Society, selected the houses shown on this page and provided information concerning them.

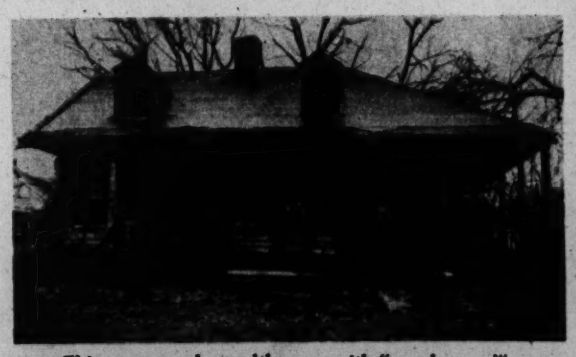
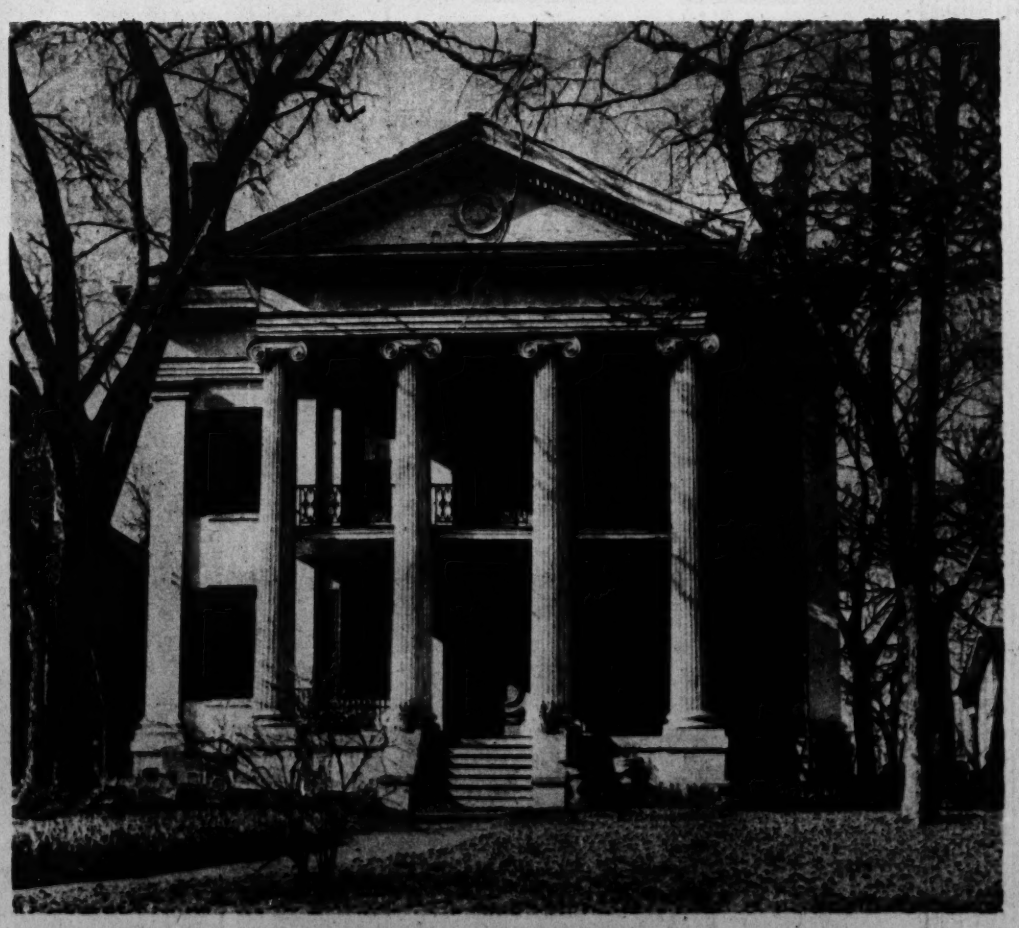
The three-story Christy residences, built about 1840 at 213-215 South Third street. One half of the twin residence was built by Andrew Christy, early merchant and part owner of the old Wiggins Ferry; the other half by the widow of his brother, Samuel. Left half of the building was occupied from 1858 to 1879 by the German Institute for Science, Art and Mechanics. Among those who used its library was Joseph Pulitzer, founder of the Post-Dispatch. Building is now being used as a rooming house.



This stone and wood house, with "condemned" sign on front door, was built at what is now 7451 Manchester boulevard, one block from the heart of present Maplewood business district. James C. Sutton, pioneer blacksmith and inventor of the Sutton plow, built the house in 1833 on a wilderness road that ran through his 350 acres. The house, with long porch and sloping roof, follows the old Creole architecture. The French introduced the style as a "tropical" house they hoped would be cool.



Stately old DeMenil mansion, on the northeast corner of Thirteenth and Cherokee streets, was built in 1848 by a fur trader, Henri Chattillon. In 1853 it was purchased by Nicolas DeMenil for $15,000. The DeMenil family built additions at the rear. Front columns of the well-preserved structure are excellent example of classic revival architecture. The house is now owned by Lee Hess. A caretaker lives on the premises.

This frame house was built in 1844; its facade is a reflection of classic revival architecture. House, at rear of 4116 North Eleventh street on ground owned by city, is scheduled to be torn down for a highway. It was built by Claus Wilshusen, owner of a coffee house and general store at Morgan (now Delmar) and Main.

The Lackland house at 10417 Lackland road in Overland is believed to have started as a cabin built sometime before 1844. In that year the property was purchased by Dennis Lynn Lackland. The Lacklands, originally from Maryland, made additions to the house, developing it in the Maryland plantation manner, with upper porch, or gallery. Classic revival architecture popular in mid-nineteenth century is apparent in its square columns and cornices. Lackland's son, Rufus, owned the house until 1910. It stood vacant until the late Wallace Fairchild Baker, retired Army major, bought it in the 1920s. It is owned and occupied by his wife and their son, John Pope Baker II.

THE RECORD BOOK of human affairs for 1954 will be closed next Friday midnight. Its last filled page will not be marked "The End," but will carry a "Continued Next Year" line, for Volume 1955 will pick up without a break the endless narrative. It too will carry on the theme of ever-changing human hopes and fears, conflicts, accomplishments and uncertainties.

What course the theme will take may be read only as time writes the record, but men read that record in the light of the past—a light that grew somewhat brighter in 1954 with the passing of the storm of war in Indochina, and signs of breaks in the clouds overhanging international affairs. The greatest hope in men's hearts was that the future might be read in the light of reason and good will rather than the all-consuming light of an H-bomb blast.

As the record book for 1954 took shape its narrative was reported and interpreted in PICTURES by hundreds of photographs and drawings. They gave the highlights of the unfolding record. Sometimes they dealt with things of seeming passing importance, yet those incidents revealed the vagaries of life. At other times PICTURES' pages were related to national and international affairs of lasting, world-wide effect. From all these photos, the editors of PICTURES have chosen those shown here as outstanding in visual effectiveness and in recording contemporary affairs. Photos published in December have been omitted.

Many of the major events of 1954, and some that pictured the simpler events of daily living, were recorded by PICTURES in color. Though not reproduced here, some of those color photographs deserve special mention.

Because of its awe-inspiring visual effect and its over-powering portent to human destinies, one is the report in color of the world's first H-bomb explosion, during United States tests at Eniwetok Atoll in the Pacific.

Other color photographs included this autumn's foliage and Thunderbird jets in formation flight over the Scott base area, by Arthur Witman; examples of old Missouri architecture as interpreting the origin of the state's settlers, by Sam Caldwell; the American debut of the Japanese Kabuki dancers, by Paul Berg; four-level travel at MacArthur Bridge, by Jack Gould; the food pages by Edward J. Burkhardt, and a broad field of fashions, sports, historic and scenic spots, arts and crafts, and everyday aspects of people and their experiences.

EUROPEAN MINIATURES

While American automobile makers vie for leadership in the consumer market by making their products longer, adding more chrome and putting more horsepower under the hoods, Europeans continue to turn out novel and miniature modes of mechanical transportation. This two-passenger, three-wheel automobile was exhibited by Electrician Andre Stamos at a Paris gadgets exhibit. The tiny vehicle, powered by a one-horsepower motor and able to go 50 miles an hour, was built by Stamos in his backyard.

Juliana Larson, a singer, waves from her plastic-roofed Messerschmitt after the one-cylinder car was unloaded at a New York pier. The German-made automobile, according to the manufacturer, reaches a speed of 60 miles an hour and gets 60 miles to the gallon of gas.

The Valmobile, a scooter that can be folded and carried like a valise, is demonstrated by a Paris model. With a speed of 50 miles an hour, and usable on rough terrain, some of the scooters have been ordered by the French army for possible use by airborne troops.

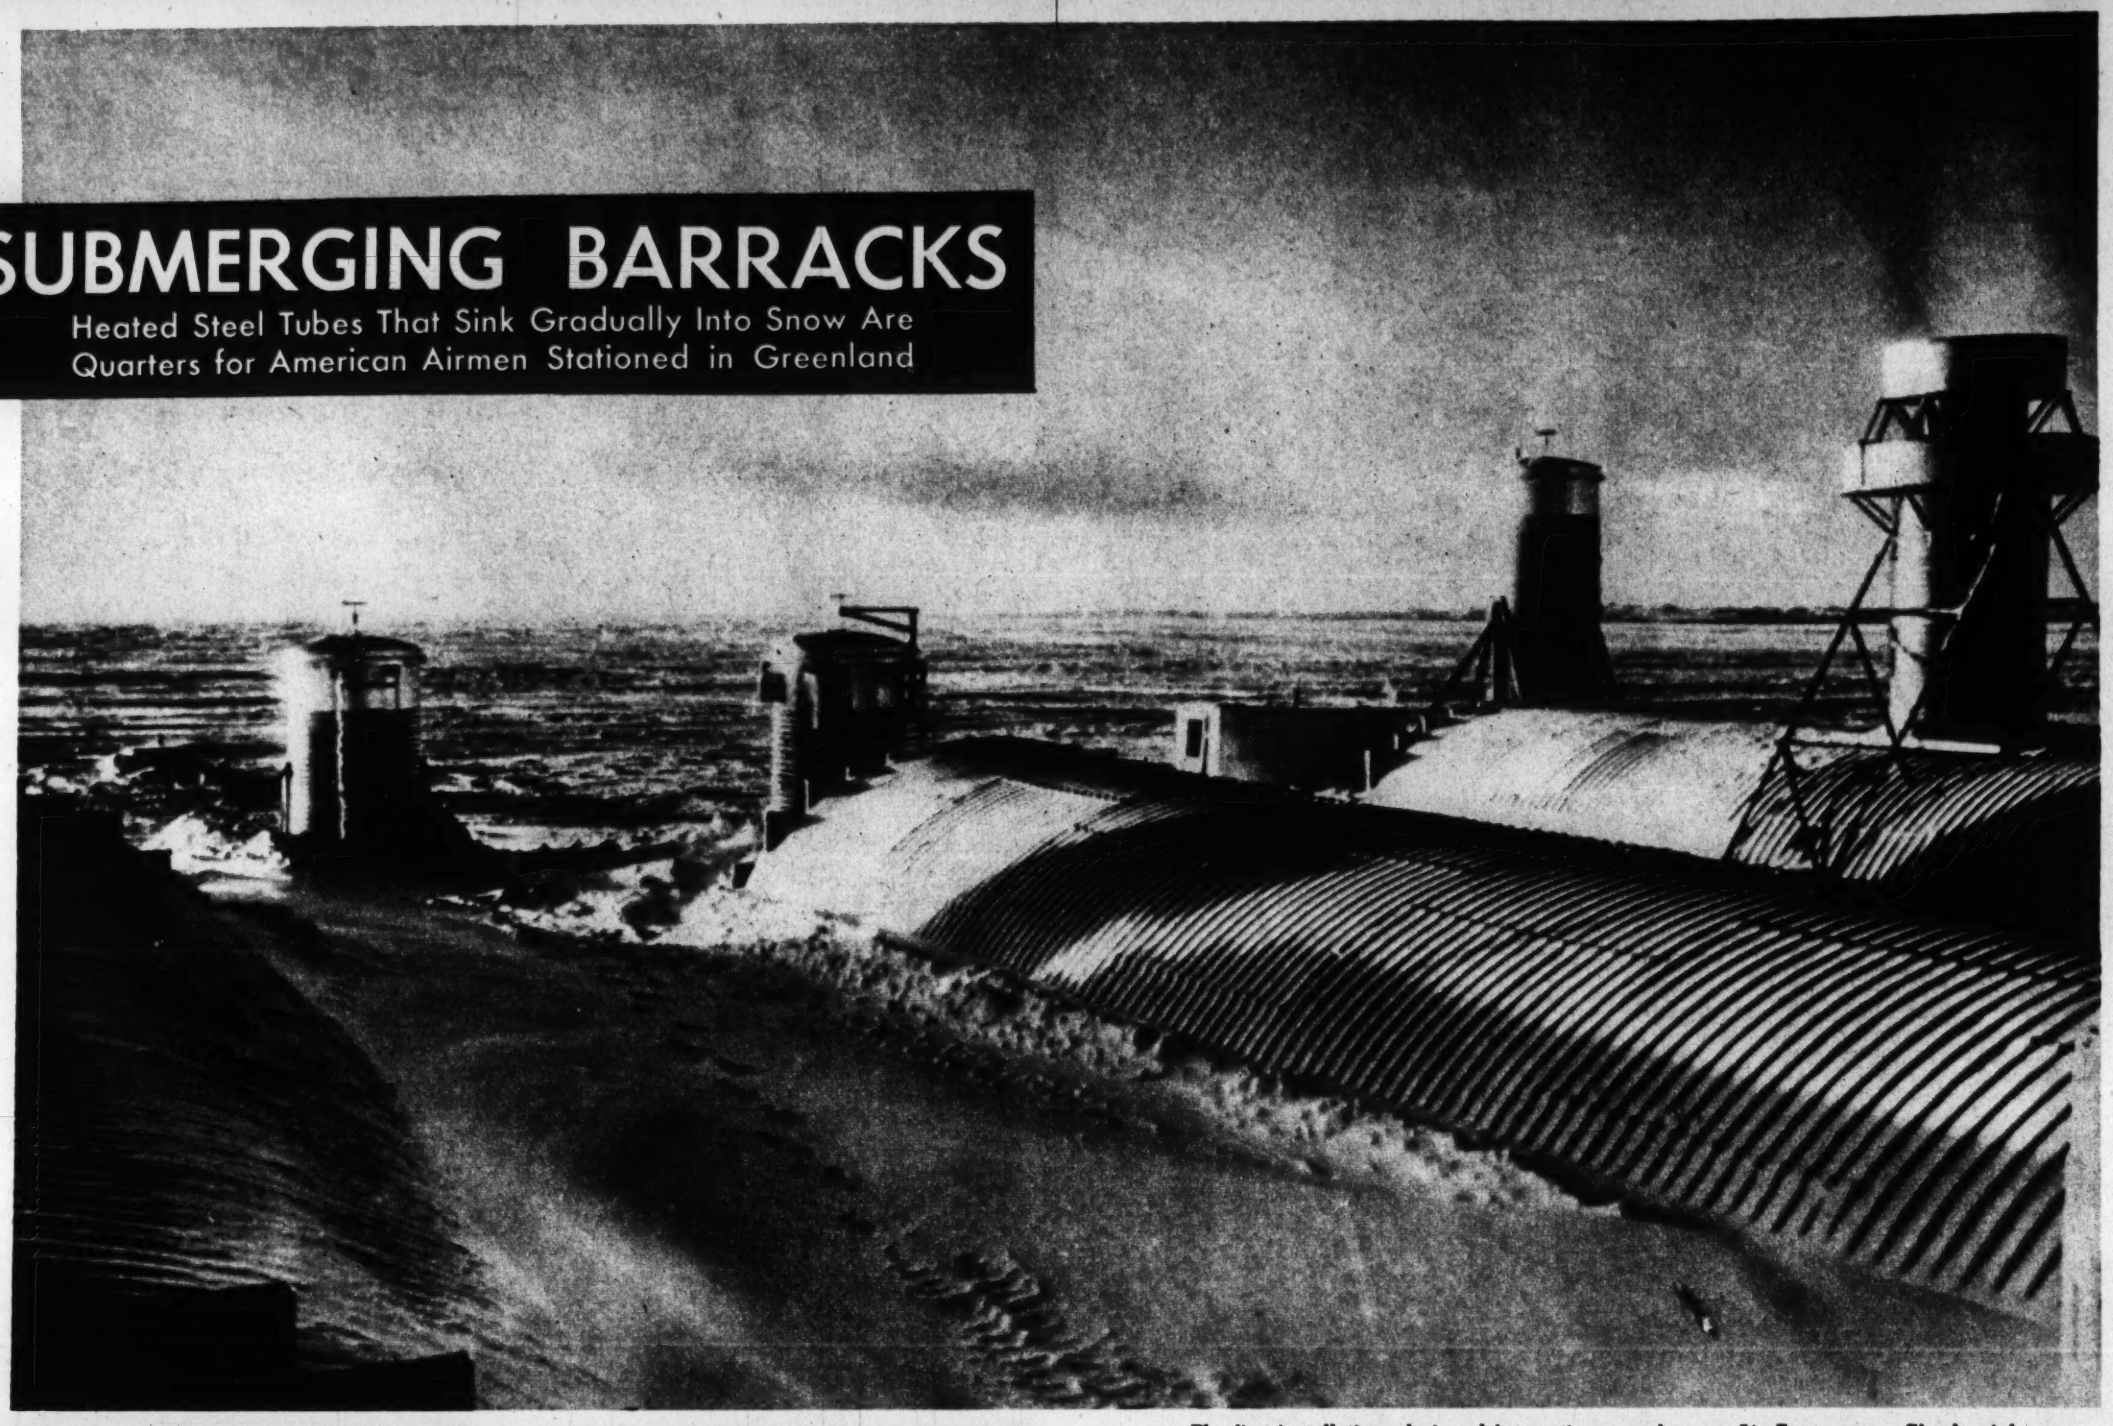
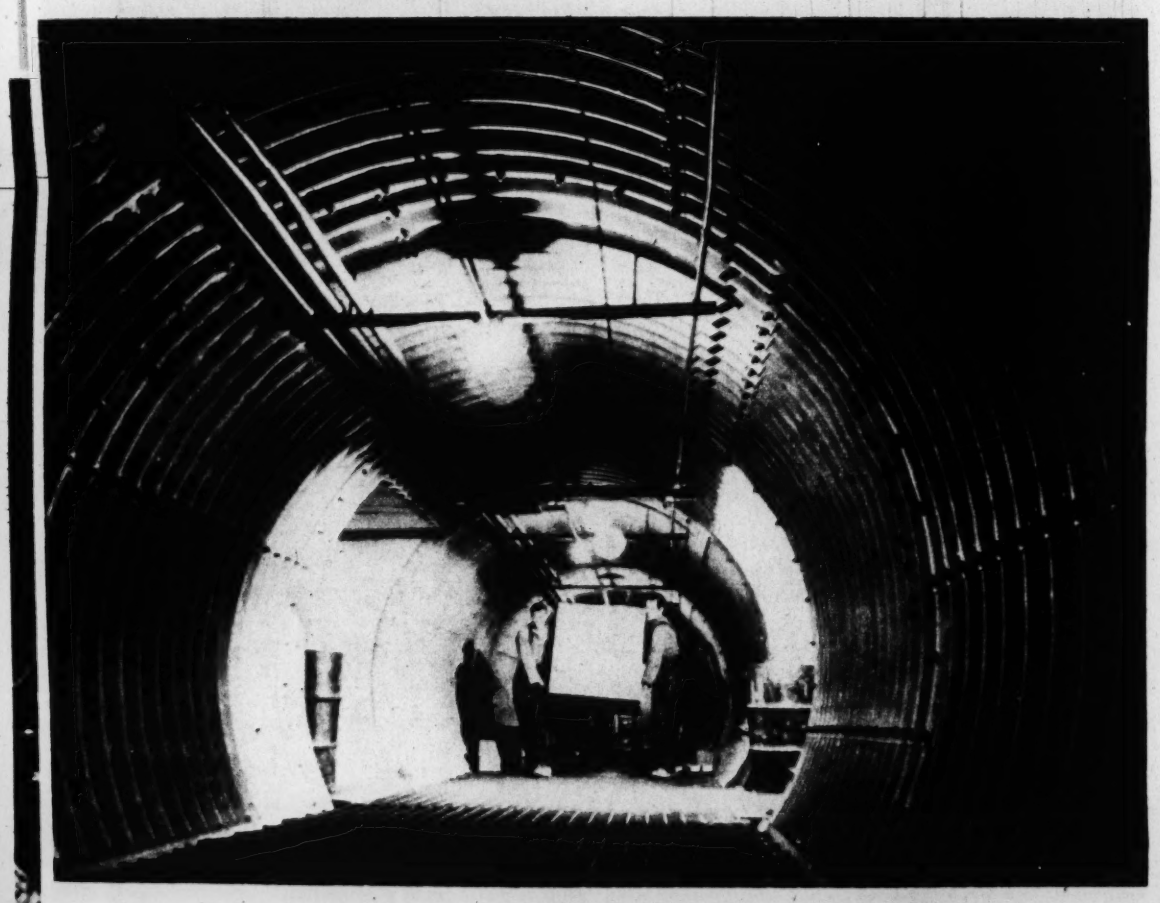
Heated Steel Tubes That Sink Gradually Into Snow Are Quarters for American Airmen Stationed in Greenland



The first installations designed for continuous use on a Greenland ice cap are these steel tubes and their entrance towers. Inside are living quarters for several score Air Force men. Slowly sinking, the tubes will eventually be covered by the snow with only the towers projecting above the surface.



Two airmen carry supplies along a passageway connecting the round-walled buildings of the new military installation.

The complete structure of buildings and connecting passages is balanced so it will sink on an even keel.

ON THE PACKED SNOW of Greenland's wasteland, where conventional buildings can't be erected, United States Air Force personnel live in steel tubes laid on the ice cap and connected together. The airmen endure the sub-zero temperatures to make weather observations and collect other useful military data. In their tubes, 18 feet in diameter and of varying lengths, are sleeping quarters, mess hall, recreation room and kitchen.

With the tubes heated to about 72 degrees above zero and the outside temperature as low as 75 degrees below, they are expected to sink into the snow and ice at the rate of three feet a year. Entrance is through hatchways in vertical towers to which extensions can be added as the tubes sink deeper into the snow.

Retired Brigadier General Robert G. Lovett, who supervised construction, estimates the tubes, already partly submerged, can be used for 15 to 18 years before they will have to be abandoned.

'Twas the night AFTER Christmas

And the Parkers were pooped,
The more the kids brightened,
The more their folks drooped

What with turkeys and puddings,
Dishes and trays,
Sue felt like she'd been
In the kitchen for days

And John, who had eaten
Much more than he should
Had a "Holiday stomach"
That felt far from good.

And so they both suffered
In a house filled with tension,
While "nerves" made them both
Feel too awful to mention.

But then they remembered
What their nurse friend Kay said
And they each took a Bromo
For their stomach and head

THERE'S A MEDICAL REASON WHY BROMO-SELTZER WORKS BEST FOR HEADACHE AND UPSET STOMACH. BROMO-SELTZER RELIEVES HEADACHE PAIN AND STOMACH ACIDITY FAST. AND ONLY BROMO-SELTZER CONTAINS AN INGREDIENT THAT GENTLY SOOTHES "NERVES" WHICH SO OFTEN CAUSE HEADACHE AND UPSET STOMACH... AND ALMOST ALWAYS ACCOMPANY THEM.

SO REMEMBER...

If what happened to them
Starts to happen to you
Just take Bromo-Seltzer
It's the best thing to do

Don't let an Upset Stomach or Headache Spoil your Holiday Fun

The battle of the giants in the biggest spectacle of them all!

GARY COOPER
BURT LANCASTER

In the year 1866, American gunfighters and adventurers rode into Mexico seeking fortunes as paid fighters in the Mexican revolution against Emperor Maximilian. Against this turbulent background, Trane, a tall, lean, ex-Confederate Army officer comes face-to-face with Joe Erin, a hard-bitten leader of a gang of gunslingers. Both men have guns for hire —to the highest bidder!

After paying Erin one hundred dollars for a horse, Trane suddenly finds himself being pursued by Government Lancers. He escapes and then vengefully seeks out Erin who grins and tells him, "That was the Lancer Lieutenant's horse I sold you!"

Erin's cut-throats see Trane on their leader's horse and think he has murdered Erin. They are about to kill him, when Erin saves him.

Trane rescues Nina, a dark-eyed, fiery street vendor, from the hands of a rowdy gunman. Later she repays his gallantry with a hearty kiss!

Trane and Erin agree to join Maximilian and are offered 50,000 pesos to escort Countess Marie Duvarre to Vera Cruz. The presence of this huge sum of money and the beautiful Countess cause both men to eye each other with distrust.

During a break in the journey, Erin takes advantage of Trane's temporary absence and makes advances to the Countess. She is shocked, for she never knew such a man before.

The suspicions of both men grow when they learn the Countess' carriage really contains over three million dollars in gold. Suddenly the air is filled with the sound of gunfire as the convoy is ambushed by thousands of rebels swarming down from the hills.

After escaping from the ambush, the carriage is tipped over and Erin's men discover the gold. A bitter gunfight takes place as greed turns the desperate, hate-filled band of men into animals!

When the smoke clears, only Erin and Trane are left! Now their hatred comes to a head. They reach for their guns . . . this is it! The battle of the giants!

Adv.

Full of Mellow Wisdom and Wit

Prof. Dr. Theodor Heuss (second from left in light suit, shaking hands with student), president of the new German Republic, was advanced to his position because he knew how to get along amiably with people in many walks of life, was easy-going, informal, completely un-selfconscious, a witty speaker, pleasantly modest. He scorned police escort when about to be elevated to the presidency with the exclamation: "Heaven forbid! What for? Who'd ever want to shoot Old Heuss?" He is said to be admired and respected by students, both those at home and the exchange students from foreign lands, with whom he often exchanges pleasantries (as in the photo). More on the exchange-student program will be found on page 24.

FREE GERMANY SPEAKS TO AMERICA

A World Trade Section, in which some of the new Germany's business, industrial and political leaders recount something of what has been accomplished in 10 years of reconstruction and make a bid for more widespread recognition of these accomplishments. Some of the articles are explanatory, some are factual, some are argumentative. Where opinions are expressed, they are the opinions of the individual writers and are not to be construed as constituting a representative composite of the whole of German thinking; nor do they reflect the opinions of this newspaper. To the extent to which world trade may have a place in the promotion and maintenance of international amity, this section is presented. It has been compiled by A. R. Lerner, a special European representative of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

'Mutual Understanding Will Produce Climate In Which Peace Can Thrive'

By Konrad Adenauer
Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany

This special issue on Germany appears at a time when Americans and Germans can look to the future with greater hope than has been possible for many years.

Recent times have shown that the people of Western Europe—and not least among them the German people—are animated by the firm and sincere desire to bury centuries old disputes and to construct a world of peace offering a better life for all men. I hope that this New Europe will not prove a disappointment to us.

On the occasion of my recent visit to the United States it was with pleasure that I could confirm the fact that America does not merely look upon this development as a well wishing observer, but that she actively supports it at the cost of considerable sacrifice to every citizen.

Political and economic ties between the United States and the Federal Republic are closer than ever before. More than that however—and I believe I am justified in saying this, the understanding which these two people have for each other, for their mutual characteristics and for their common objectives has deepened in a way which no one would have thought possible a few years ago.

Political treaties have their justification. Economic relations are necessary. Only mutual understanding however, among the peoples of the world will produce the climate in which the sensitive flower of peace can thrive and blossom.

'Through Co-Operation We Will Reach the Goal'

By Fritz Berg
President of the Federation of German Industry (BDI)

The Paris agreements have again given documentary proof that the idea of co-operation between the people of Europe is still very much alive. The hope that co-operation will finally bring achievement has been immensely strengthened. It is well-known that German industrialists have given their assurance, that they will do all in their power to make co-operation between the people of Europe a success.

German industrialists are also willing to co-operate fully with every free nation of the Western World. Having had contact myself with many American industrialists during the meeting of the Second International Congress of Industrialists at Paris in the spring 1954, I have come to the conclusion that all obstacles to general liberalization of commercial policies which still exist can be straightened out. I am positive that we will witness further integration of our mutual work on the basis of free enterprise.

If today the industry of the German Federal Republic is able to carry out its part of the work regarding successful achievement of co-operation among the peoples of Western Europe, this has been made possible to a great extent through the generous help extended by America to German industry after the late war.

I have recently returned from a visit to the U.S.A. in the company of a German industrial delegation. During the visit we had the pleasure of coming into contact with many leading American industrialists. Their talks have re-affirmed my positive feeling that by working together in close co-operation we will undoubtedly reach the goal we have set for ourselves.

Ambassador Says Thanks for Understanding, Friendship

By Heinz L. Krekeler
German Ambassador to the United States

One of the aspects of American life most impressive to every foreigner coming to this country, is the outstanding part played by American newspapers not only in forming public opinion, but also in shaping American policy. The pages of great American newspapers like the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, reflecting as they do, an attitude of thoughtful responsibility toward world affairs, offer significant proof of this.

Inherent in such an attitude is the recognition that relations between the nations of the free world depend on better mutual understanding. I genuinely appreciate, therefore, the spirit in which the St. Louis Post-Dispatch has devoted its talents to preparing a special section dealing exclusively with German affairs.

This special issue is, to a large degree, a report on the work done by my people, and on the success which they have achieved in the great task of rebuilding our country politically, culturally and economically. Every German knows and appreciates the role which the United States have had in this tremendous work. We are lastingly grateful for the help given us by individual Americans and by the American Government in caring for the needy and in the reconstruction of our destroyed homes, our factories and our lines of transportation and communication. We recognize, too, that the American press, by reporting the facts and explaining and underlining the spirit at work in Germany, has made it possible to a considerable extent for the American people to take this generous action.

I am glad, therefore, to have this opportunity to convey to Americans everywhere the thanks of the German people for the understanding and friendship which we have found so manifest in this country.

Vice-Chancellor Says Thanks, We Have Not Forgotten

By Dr. Franz Blucher
Vice-Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany

When, in 1947, at Columbia University, George Marshall announced the basic principles of his plan for American economic assistance, he also flung open to the Federal Republic the gates of the Free World. Right from the start West Germany was included in this program of economic assistance. The Marshall plan not only comprised a very extensive and magnanimous scheme of assistance to the national economies of European countries, which had been so badly affected by the war and its aftermath, but, thanks to American initiative, it was also instrumental in bringing about economic co-ordination and reorganization on a European scale. As early as April 1948, the countries participating in this plan joined together in the European Economic Council (OEEC) for the purpose of joint reconstruction and economic reapproachment. Thus, the Marshall Plan gave the first effective stimulus of the post-war period to the realization of those supernational economic ideas without which the present economic status of Western Europe and the Federal Republic, now solidly resting on sound market conditions and healthy structural relations, could hardly have been visualized.

As the Federal Minister responsible for making the Marshall Plan and European economic co-operation a reality in West Germany, I feel particularly prompted to make this the occasion for an assurance that the Federal Government and the overwhelming majority of the German people will never forget that the United States of America has, from the very beginning, paved the way to world-wide economic co-operation for the Federal Republic and, at the same time, has rendered her economic aid as to a partner of equal standing. The material and psychological consequences of this attitude adopted by the United States towards a conquered enemy, whose moral, social and economic foundations had collapsed, must be considered of no less importance. West Germany was able to breathe again. Her care-worn and despondent people were given new energy and courage and the will to make good in future, living and working together with other nations for prosperity and peace. In co-operation with ECA and its successor organization MSA and FOA, we have from the very first day when economic aid was started endeavored so to use it as to get the best possible economic results, and I believe that it has been possible, thanks to German-American and inter-European co-operation, with the aid of the Marshall Plan, to make particularly rapid progress in the economic reconstruction of the Federal Republic, and to consolidate and secure the gains for the future in ever-increasing measure by our own efforts.

If West Germany has been able to reach this status in so short a period and can now hope to consolidate and strengthen it by her own efforts and work, we all know that these successes have been greatly facilitated and, in many economic fields, made possible only by the material and moral assistance of the United States.

The Federal Government knows that, apart from a consistent policy aiming at maintaining internal financial stability, it owes its successes largely to international economic co-operation aimed at restoring freedom in the movement of goods and money and genuine competition in free world markets. The Marshall Plan has placed these possibilities again within the reach of the practical and responsible efforts of the nations of the free world. The Federal Republic is willingly and gratefully following this lead. West Germany is pledged and bound to the West by tradition and by her heritage of occidental culture. The Federal Republic has grasped the helping hand offered at the time of dire need and hopes to retain it in lasting friendship.

Composition And Functioning of New German Government Explained

By Dr. Hermann Ehlers

(The following article, especially prepared for this publication, is said to be the last writing of the late Dr. Hermann Ehlers, who was president of the Bundestag (German national legislature).

The Federal Republic of Germany is only five years old. Its parliament, the Bundestag, is thus still a young institution. Five years is a short period measured against the tradition of parliaments outside Germany, but long enough to have impressed on the Bundestag characteristic features of its own. In this connection, it was not unimportant that veteran parliamentarians from the German Reichstag of pre-1933 days were able to assist the younger deputies with the fruits of their long years of political experience.

The members of the Bundestag are elected for a four-year period by general, direct, free, equal and secret vote. The election of the First Bundestag took place on Aug. 14, 1949. The Second Bundestag, which was elected on Sept. 6, 1953, consists of 487 members, with the following breakdown according to parties: Christian Democratic Union/Christian Social Union (C.D.U./C.S.U.), 244 members; Social Democratic Party (S.P.D.) 151; Free Democratic Party (F.D.P.) 47; All German Bloc/Union of Expelles and Dispossessed (G.B./B.H.E.), 27; German Party (D.P.), 15. There are three independent members who adhere to no party. In addition, there are 22 members representing Berlin (6 C.D.U./C.S.U.; 11 S.P.D.; 5 F.D.P.), who have, however, only a consultative voice, since, by reason of Germany's present situation in international law, the sovereignty of the Federal Republic does not extend to Berlin.

The Federal Republic has no Second Chamber (Senate). Nevertheless, its nine constituent Laender participate in the legislation and administration of the Federation through the Bundesrat. This body is not composed of elected representatives of the people (like the U.S. Senate, for instance) but of members of the Laender Governments who must act on instructions from the latter. Here again the representatives of Land Berlin have only consulative status.

The Bundestag adopts the Federal laws. Bills may be introduced by 15 Bundestag members, by the Bundesrat or by the Federal Government. For a bill to become law it must pass through three readings, of which the first is a debate on principle. If the Bundesrat does not approve an adopted bill or law in the form in which it has been adopted by the Bundestag, it may institute a procedure of joint consideration.

A committee composed of 10 members of the Bundestag and 10 members of the Bundesrat then has the task of bringing about an agreement, if possible. If this committee should propose any amendments to the adopted bill, the Bundestag must again vote on it. If the result of this vote does not meet with the approval of the Bundesrat, the latter may, in the case of the so-called Zustimmungsgesetze (adopted bills requiring the Bundesrat's approval in order to become laws, i.e., such as concern amendments to the constitution, territorial changes affecting the Laender, and finance and tax legislation), refuse its approval, upon which the bill is thrown out. In the case of the remaining "simple" laws (i.e. those which do not require approval by the Bundesrat), the latter may enter an objection. However, this objection may be overruled by a vote of the Bundestag.

DR. HERMANN EHLERS

The Bundestag has other decisive functions in addition to its legislative powers. It participates in the choice of the Head of the State to the extent that the members of the Bundestag constitute one-half of the Federal Convention which elects the Federal President for five years, the other half being elected by the parliaments of the Laender. The candidate who receives the votes of the majority of the members of the Federal Convention is elected. If nobody obtains this majority after two ballots, a third ballot is held in which the candidate who receives the largest number of votes becomes president.

In keeping with the rules of parliamentary democracy, the Bundestag creates and controls the Government. It elected the Federal Chancellor by a majority vote of its members on the proposal of the Federal President. The person elected must be appointed Chancellor by the Federal Parliament; on the chancellor's proposal, in turn, the Federal Ministers are appointed and dismissed by the Federal President. In the Second Bundestag, the Government of Dr. Adenauer rests on the coalition of C.D.U./C.S.U., F.D.P., G.B./B.H.E., D.P., which constitute a two-thirds majority. In performing his functions, the Federal Chancellor requires confidence of parliament. However, the Bundestag can express its lack of confidence in him only by electing a successor by the majority of its members. This "constructive confidence vote" was instituted in the light of experiences under the Weimar Republic, when majorities were often found in the Reichstag to overthrow a government, but, by reason of their heterogenous composition, were not in a position to form a new government.

As a further measure of control over the Government's activities, the Bundestag can put questions to it. These fall into three categories: A) major questions which must be answered at a plenary sitting and may then be debated; B) minor questions which the Government answers in writing; C) oral questions, which are put by members in the monthly "Question Hour" and are answered orally by the Government.

The Bundestag also has an influence on the appointment of the Federal Constitutional Court. Furthermore, the judges of the Federal Supreme Court and the Federal High Courts are appointed to their office with the participation of a committee for judicial appointments, half the members of which are elected by the Bundestag.

The Bundestag elects its President and the three vice-presidents. By virtue of the independence of the parliament, the President exercises the proprietary and police powers within the parliament building. He is the senior authority for all functionaries of the Bundestag. There is a Council of Elders whose task it is to help the President in the carrying out of business, and, particularly, to bring about agreement between the parties of the program of work of the Bundestag. This council consists of the President, the vice-presidents and 17 members (and three substitutes) plus a representative of the Federal Cabinet.

The Second Bundestag has 36 standing committees. Special or investigating committees may be appointed by the House in full session. The vital link of Parliament with the people is represented particularly by the Petitions Committee, the German Basic Law, just like the American Constitution, ensuring every citizen the right to address requests and complaints to Parliament.

The young German Parliament has played a not unessential part in the reconstruction of Germany after her collapse in the Second World War, a reconstruction which has often astonished foreign observers. The task of these years of reconstruction was not only to provide the German people with a material basis for freedom and democracy after a dark period of dictatorship. It will be the foremost duty of the German Bundestag to see to it that these ideals are never lost again.

Legislator Explains Party Adherence to European Integration Policy

By Dr. Heinrich von Brentano
Chairman of the Bundestag Fraction of the CDU/CSU

For several years, under the leadership of the Christian-Democratic Union, but with an assent transcending party lines, Germany has taken an active part in the policy called European integration.

It seems worthwhile to stress once more the reasons which have been paramount for this political action, so overwhelmingly endorced by the electorate on the occasion of the federal elections on Sept. 6, 1953. Let us mention first and foremost that the experiences of the past have had a profound influence on the German people, indeed profounder than it is or actually perhaps even can be realized by many people abroad. The recognition of the fact that isolated existence means nothing but suicide for the nations of the free world has gained deep roots in the conscience of our people.

Furthermore, it is the genuine desire to find ways and means for a reconciliation with our great neighbor France which has been a most stimulating factor. This attempt to reach a new epoch in Franco-German relations, emanating from France, has found an unstinted reply in the hearts and minds of Germans. This Franco-German reconciliation, however, should be seen as part of our overriding wish to give proof and evidence to friendly nations that the course we steer has no longer anything in common with that of an agonizing past. It is our conviction that the surrender of certain sovereign rights should be sealed by a merger of this sovereignty on a new level. But even with these words the picture is not complete. It is our conviction that balance and strength are the prerequisites of peace and that such a formation of a stabilized Europe is part and parcel of the genuine needs of any part of the world as long as peaceful aims are pursued. We should not and we never shall confound strength and provocation. We are certain that real strength in calm self-assuredness leads to the very opposite of provocation. It is our conviction that the creation of a consolidated European continent will be a most important and truly decisive pillar of the Atlantic community which in turn—this is our sincere hope—shall prosper and thrive towards ever more closely integrated existence itself.

We do not doubt that the historic aspect of the present attempts at marshalling strength for the free world is not the military one, but the economic and political one. We should and shall be conscious of the fact that the first and foremost objective of all political action is the individual, is the citizen and his spiritual aspirations.

Dr. Heinrich von Brentano

The aid and assistance accorded to the idea and principle of European recovery by the Government and people of the United States is gratefully appreciated in my country as in other nations of free Europe, since we are not forgetful of America's conscious idealism.

We are also convinced that the integration of the European Political Community will mean the opening up of an incomparable new phase in American-European relations. Only the combined effort of a healthy Europe and a strong America will provide the bases finally for tackling the urgent and almost overpowering task to give assistance to the numerous countries and peoples striving for a more decent standard of living and thus for a prevailing of democracy in the world.

Opposition Sponsors Co-Existence

by ERICH OLLENHAUER

Chairman of the Social Democratic Party of Germany

The Social Democratic Party, largest West German party, in convention in Berlin found complete agreement on the following points:

The foremost aim of the Social Democratic Party's policy is and will remain the re-unification of Germany in peace and freedom through negotiations.

The general foundation of the foreign policy of the Social Democratic Party is a constant and untiring striving for the preservation of peace and the prevention of war, which for the Social Democratic Party cannot be a means to solve international or national problems, including re-unification.

The Social Democratic Party, positively and without restriction, continues to oppose the policy of integration sponsored by Federal Chancellor Dr. Konrad Adenauer, as well as, the European Defense Organization.

The Social Democratic Party is just as definite in opposing, now as before, the power politics or politics based solely on military strength as represented by Federal Chancellor Adenauer.

The Social Democratic Party demands the determined introduction of a German foreign policy which with all its available strength and means contributes to the relaxing of international tensions, serves resumption of diplomatic and commercial relations with all states East and West and leads to the concentration of all forces of domestic and foreign politics on the peaceful re-unification of Germany.

On these five principles of the Social Democratic foreign policy is based the creed of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, which today is the great state-preserving opposition party in the Federal Diet and will be the great mainstay of the state, the government party of the Federal Republic tomorrow. I say the creed of the Social Democratic Party of Germany is in accordance with these five principles for the attainment of peace through mutual understanding of the self-determination of peoples and of international co-operation on the basis of equal partnership.

There can be no doubt that, according to the views of the Social Democratic Party, which experience has proven sufficiently to be justified and correct, the political ideas of the Federal Government, as symbolized in the concept and instrument of the European Defense Organization cannot serve the foreign policy which is outlined in the five social democratic party principles and which alone is in the interest of the German people and also in the interest of Europe and the world. The politics of the Federal Chancellor involves the danger that the divided Germany may become in the cold war a pawn for the political interests of powerful states, which are at the same time the occupying powers in Germany. The road in the foreign policy of the Federal Republic of Germany can be traveled only within the framework of the five social democratic principles, otherwise the Federal Republic will become a center of crises.

At the same time, the Social Democratic Party, in order to eliminate all possible misunderstanding, wishes to point out very emphatically that, according to its unalterable views, today's divided Germany in the west and the re-united Germany of tomorrow are part of the free western world. The Social Democratic Party of Germany knows of no possibility of tolerating, and even less of consenting to the establishment of a bolshevist or "popular democratic" regime in West Germany and in the re-united Germany. But the Social Democratic Party does not lose sight of the fact that the West is not the only thing in this world and that Germany has as her neighbor in the East the second largest power, i.e., the U.S.S.R. The Social Democratic Party, therefore, is of the opinion that the only solution possible in this situation is peaceful co-existence.

Intensified U.S.-German Trade Sought by Promotion Office

By Dr. H. C. W. Alexander Menne,
Chairman of the Board of the German American Trade Promotion Office and President of the Association of Chemical Industries

During my visits to the United States and during my many negotiations with leading American industrialists I have become convinced that a liberal trade policy will be pursued by the United States government and that President Eisenhower will continue his foreign trade policy aiming at a more sound and more free exchange of goods and payments.

We in Western Germany do not underestimate the difficulties stemming from protectionistic trends, but on the other hand we firmly trust that the goodwill and readiness of the Americans to further expand the economic relations between our countries will eventually succeed. As part of our endeavors to promote the mutual trade with the United States the Federal Republic only recently extended substantially the liberalization of our Dollar imports. The agreement on double taxation reached between the United States and Germany will become effective very soon, and a special progress has been made by the signing of the treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation which will put German-American relations on a sound basis.

It is one of the main tasks of West German economic policy to normalize and expand our foreign trade with the United States. The steady growth of our exports to the United States demonstrates that these efforts of ours have been successful and even have achieved a closing of the "dollar-gap" which only a short time ago was so extremely critical, although the balance of trade itself is not yet evened up. Despite this favorable development the present status can be called only a promising start which requires of both partners a great amount of further work and new measures to create the fundamentals of a sound exchange of goods and a genuinely durable business relationship.

The great interest displayed by the American public in the rehabilitation of Western Germany as well as numerous expressions in the United States press have met with a special response in the Federal Republic as underlining the importance attributed by both sides to an intensification of German-American economic relations. Therefore I appreciate very much that the Washington Post and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, as leading United States dailies, dedicate a special issue exclusively to Western Germany in order to further the understanding of the American people for our country and for our efforts to regain an adequate position within the community of the free peoples.

UNDER THE FREEDOM BELL

By DR. OTTO SUHR

President of the Berlin Diet

DR. OTTO SUHR

When, after that long and terrible period in which Berlin had no representative assembly, a new parliament was elected in 1946, with its seat in the east sector because at that time the town was still undivided, the results of that election were positively sensational. The close contact with Soviet methods had rendered the Berliners immune against the infection of Communism and had made them avow their love of freedom in a manner which could hardly have been more demonstrative. The Soviets never got over this overwhelming defeat of their Communist satellites. Their disappointment intensified the cold war in Berlin and their acts of violence, which culminated in the division, were directed against that parliament as the last manifestation of western democracy.

Today the city parliament of Berlin meets in the west sector underneath the tower housing the freedom bell—a gift from millions of American citizens—and the voice of freedom rings from the platform of the House of Representatives and is transmitted by radio to listeners far in the Soviet zone. To safeguard the freedom of Berlin, which has become the nerve center of the German situation—yes, perhaps of the whole of Europe—is its foremost task.

In the cold war between the large powers, Berlin has become a sort of eighth wonder of the world. The Berliners' love of freedom is in direct contradiction to the geographical position of the town. Experts of constitutional and international law are unable to define the legal status of the city. Financially, Berlin is dependent on the Federal Republic and its citizens have given unequivocal evidence of their adherence to western democracy, but international treaties do not permit it to be governed by Bonn. The classical economic laws cannot be applied to Berlin and the Berliner is often forced by his political convictions to act against his economic interests.

Berlin, however, does exist — and not only because of the strong and vociferous vitality of its citizens—indeed, its existence is an important factor in European politics. Let us visualize for one moment that Berlin was submerged in the red flood of the surrounding Soviet zone. This would mean not only the end of all German hopes, but if the Soviets succeeded in taking Berlin, Soviet tanks would have a spring-board for the drive to the west. This is quite clear and obvious—a point that cannot be ignored by American foreign policy.

In the Cold War an Outpost Has a Fierce Will for Freedom of Life

In this situation, the Berlin House of Representatives became one of the most peculiar parliaments in the world. Since the Berlin Constitution does not differentiate between East and West Berlin, some representatives from the east have been elected in the west, courageous men and women who still live and work in the east sector but who have identified themselves with the freedom of the west. In addition, the Berlin House of Representatives has made allowances for the population of east Berlin to be represented in the City parliament. The house, therefore, can still claim to be the mouthpiece for the population of Berlin as a whole, with special emphasis on its function as a forum for freedom.

The term of office of the House of Representatives will have run its course at the end of this year. The House has on several occasions expressed its willingness to agree to immediate elections to be conducted under the same conditions of international supervision and under the same electoral law as in 1946. The result of such elections would be a foregone conclusion. There is hardly any other place in the world which as a result of its own experience is more critical of bolshevism than Berlin, and particularly the Soviet occupied sector nobody knows that better than the Soviets themselves! For this reason they have up to the present again and again prevented such reunification on a democratic basis.

Another peculiarity of the Berlin House of Representatives lies in the plurality of its functions. Berlin is a city state. The parliament of Berlin is city and Land parliament at the same time. And it also deputizes for the Federal Assembly. Berlin can only live under the protection of the legal and financial system of the Federal Republic. However, in order to conform with Allied agreements, the laws of the Federal Republic are applicable in Berlin only after they have been passed once more by the Berlin representatives.

The awareness of its responsibilities in the struggle between East and West, which the parliament of Berlin never forgets even in its every day routine work, is not only a handicap, but also a stimulus. The House is forced to do its work under incessant tension, with unflagging watchfulness and never-ending perseverance. But these conditions produce qualities, such as alertness, clarity and brightness—reminiscent of the Berlin atmosphere and its dry and bracing climate—and also perseverance, resilience and receptiveness, qualities for which its population has often been praised.

THE FREEDOM BELL

The atmosphere of sober and matter-of-fact activities pervades the House of Representatives as well, regardless whether it is busy dealing with difficult measures to alleviate unemployment and the excessively high average age of the population, problems which beset Berlin more than any other place, or whether it is trying to smooth the continual friction in all matters concerning relations with the East. All its work is overshadowed by the cold war which now has been going on for nine years. The negative result of the Four Power Conference in Berlin has confounded many hopes and has renewed the tension of expectation. It is a life-and-death question of world political significance how many more years Berlin and—what is even more important—the people in the Soviet zone can stand up to the pressure of the cold war. In this question there is hope and danger at the same time; in it lies Berlin's obligation and the duty of the western world.

Federal Republic of Germany
Second Biggest Buyer of American Tobacco

In the course of a few years the Federal Republic of Germany has become one of the most important buyers of American tobacco. Germany is actually ranging in the second place among foreign markets for American tobacco; as for cigar tobacco and Burley, it is even absorbing the bulk of American exports.

American tobacco has already been exported to Germany for more than a hundred years. Until World War II, however, Germany did not play such an important part as a foreign market. At first only the deliveries of fire-cured tobacco were worth mentioning, for which the Hanse towns, especially the town of Bremen, were regarded as the central marketing places in Europe. Nevertheless, the German smoking tobacco industry was manufacturing a larger percentage of North-American Virginia tobacco already during that period, although the German market was dominated at that time by the Oriental cigarette. During the years 1935 to 1939, an average of only 10.5 million lbs. or 2.5 per cent of the total American tobacco exports were shipped to Germany.

When Germany was occupied by American and British Forces, the German population came into touch with a cigarette which was chiefly containing American tobacco. The German smoker began to like this type of cigarette, and today more than 80 per cent of the cigarettes smoked in Germany are American blends. The smoking tobacco industry, whose products are often used for self-made cigarettes, is mainly producing blends similar to those which are represented in the popular types of cigarettes, and in the same way qualified pipe tobacco is made on the basis of American Virginia tobacco. The German cigar industry is today also using a by far larger percentage of American tobacco than in former years.

With yearly imports of 70 to 80 million lbs. or 15 to 20 per cent of the American tobacco exports, the Federal Republic of Germany is at present the second largest buyer of American tobacco.

The German imports are including the main types of exported American tobacco. In 1953 the German imports were as follows:

Flue-cured: 61 million lbs. or 14 per cent of American flue-cured exports.
Burley: 5 million lbs. or 20 per cent of American Burley exports.
Cigar tobacco: 2.8 million lbs. or 37 per cent of American cigar tobacco exports.

This development was only possible owing to the generous American aid granted to Germany. The first American tobaccos delivered to Germany after the war were totally paid for from American foreign aid funds. In 1950 the German industry was finally able to raise dollars of their own in order to purchase further quantities of tobacco, and with the increasing stabilization of the German Economy the percentage of foreign aid has decreased more and more. Germany will not forget that in the course of the postwar years the American government has made available a total of 97 million dollars for tobacco supplies—71 million dollars thereof out of Marshall Plan funds.

Although tobacco consumption in Germany is continuously increasing—

Consumption per capita in 1948-49: 1.3 lbs.
Consumption per capita in 1953-54: 3.6 lbs.

the prewar level of 4 lbs. has not yet been reached again and the consumption is far below that of other countries, e.g. in the United Kingdom with 4.4 lbs. per capita the Netherlands and Belgium with 5 lbs. per capita the United States with 9.5 lbs. per capita

There are, consequently still considerable reserves in the German market, also with regard to American tobacco. It cannot be assumed, however, that the German imports of American tobacco will hold their present level or will even increase automatically. It should not be forgotten that exports and imports are in a close correlation with one another. Sorry to say, the often discussed measures aiming at an increase of the American imports have not yet been realized — on the contrary, a certain trend towards a new policy of restrictions seems to prevail. Furthermore the trend of American tobacco prices is a serious problem for the tobacco industry and the trade of the Federal Republic of Germany; it appears to be a matter of urgency to promote tobacco growing in the United States so that the offered quantities and qualities will be sufficient for the higher demand in Germany as well as in many other countries of the free world, thus guaranteeing a stabilization of prices urgently desired by all countries concerned. The German tobacco trade and industry are confident that these problems can be solved in a spirit of friendly cooperation between our countries.

BUREAU PROMOTES U. S.-GERMAN TRADE

By Dr. Georg Schaller
Director, German-American Trade Promotion Office, Cologne

In order to fully understand and interpret the present economic situation a short survey of the development of trade relations between the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States should be made. When analyzing German export and import figures we have to bear in mind that only after the currency reform and the reconstruction of her industry Germany was in a position to resume her export trade including her exports to the United States. The figures from 1949 onwards indicate the following trend:

Exports to the United States		Imports from the United States
1949	$ 46 million	1949	$822 million
1950	$102 million	1950	$413 million
1951	$236 million	1951	$647 million
1952	$249 million	1952	$596 million
1953	$296 million	1953	$394 million
Jan.-Sept.		Jan.-Sept.
1954	$210 million	1954	$397 million

We follow the aim of intensifying mutual co-operation in the political and economic field. The Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation recently concluded will certainly serve as a sound basis towards reaching this end. We hope that unrestricted convertibility of currencies will eventually be achieved.

Generally improved conditions now encourage a more liberal foreign trade policy and a gradual reduction of discriminatory measures against the dollar area forced upon European countries because of the dollar shortage. First steps were taken by Germany in February 1953 with her "List of Liberalized Commodities" which recently was extended, liberalizing 60 to 70 per cent of German imports from the United States.

American exports to Germany mainly are of cotton, tobacco, wheat, vegetable and animal oil, citrus fruit, minerals, machinery and finished products. Western Germany offers a great variety, such as precision and optical instruments, watches and clocks, pottery, earthenware, china and glass, leather goods, toys and Christmas decorations, pharmaceuticals, cutlery and hardware, handicraft articles etc. as well as machines of all kinds and motor vehicles.

The German-American Trade Promotion Office, Cologne, with branch offices in Berlin, Hanover and Munich, New York and Toronto, was established to further trade between the United States and Western Germany and is dedicated to the task of fully acquainting North American buyers with the possibilities of the German market. United States business men should avail themselves of the services of the New York branch, the German-American Trade Promotion Office, Empire State Building, Suite 6900, 350 Fifth Avenue, in all matters pertaining to German-American trade.

Interest Rate Drops; Blocked Marks Freed

By Ernst Matthiensen
General Manager of the Rhein-Main Bank AG., Frankfort-on-Main

For more than two years the development of the rates of interest in Western Germany has had a downward trend. The decrease of interest rates first took effect in the money market and has in the meantime also affected the capital market. All indications seem to support the assumption that the year of 1955 will continue to favor the development of a really free and increasingly efficient capital market.

The official bank discount rate, screwed up to 6 p. c. during the Korean crisis, was reduced to 5 p. c. in May 1952 and lowered, in steps of ½ p. c. each time, until it had reached 3 p. c. in May 1954. This reduction of the discount rate was more than a mere weapon of national monetary policy; it also indicated the continued progress of Western Germany's integration in the world economic system.

This gradual approach was marked by such milestones as the London Agreement on German Foreign Debts of February 1953, the declaration, in September 1953, of the German readiness to transfer the yield of foreign investments in Germany, and the subsequent easing of the regulations governing the blocked-mark until the latter was completely liberalized in September 1954. With regard to the capital movements of foreign creditors and investors, the goal of making the D-Mark convertible has thus practically been attained.

German Music Recovers Quickly From Ideological Suppression

By Dr. Heinrich Strobel

Amazingly quickly, the Phenix of German music recovered from the ashes of complete collapse, being more lively than ever, and his plumage more beautiful. The three Western Occupation Powers took an important part in this revival. They assisted the temporarily weak German administration in rebuilding theatres and orchestras, also providing scores and other material. It is easy to understand that under these circumstances the musical production of the various zones of occupation assumed the national characteristics of the occupant. Soon it proved impossible to limit music to certain regions: Debussy and Messiaen were soon also produced in Northern Germany, and Britten and Copland could be heard in the South.

By the reactionary and nationalistic cultural policy of the Hitler regime the Germans had practically been excluded from international musical development since 1933. Now suddenly a real wave of new compositions flooded the ruins of Western Germany, attracting not only the interest of experts but of wide parts of the public. Mushroomlike, international conferences and music festivals sprang into existence. Frequently they were insufficiently prepared.

Even more difficult than the building of orchestras was the restoration of the large opera buildings. Especially small towns with their century-old tradition developed admirable energies to replace the barns and halls where operas were being played by regular modern theatres.

After the currency reform the building activity increased. Even where the inertia of the opera prevented the complete liberation from antiquated ideas, it can be said that generally the modern style of scenic presentation, as the stage developed it in the twenties, replaced the old style of the opera. It is strange to note that this change was most radical where the tradition was strongest, namely in Bayreuth. Wolfgang and Wieland Wagner, grandsons of the once idolized composer, staged operas more radically stylized than anywhere else in Germany.

Modern opera directors like Oskar Fritz Schuh and Gunther Rennert are engaged in promoting the scenic renovation of the opera. Their influence has spread, regionally modified, to the other German stages. Gradually also a new generation of singers and leaders of orchestras grew up without achieving yet, however, the same eminence the twenties had to boast of.

Two clearly different phases are discernible in the creative musical work of Western Germany.

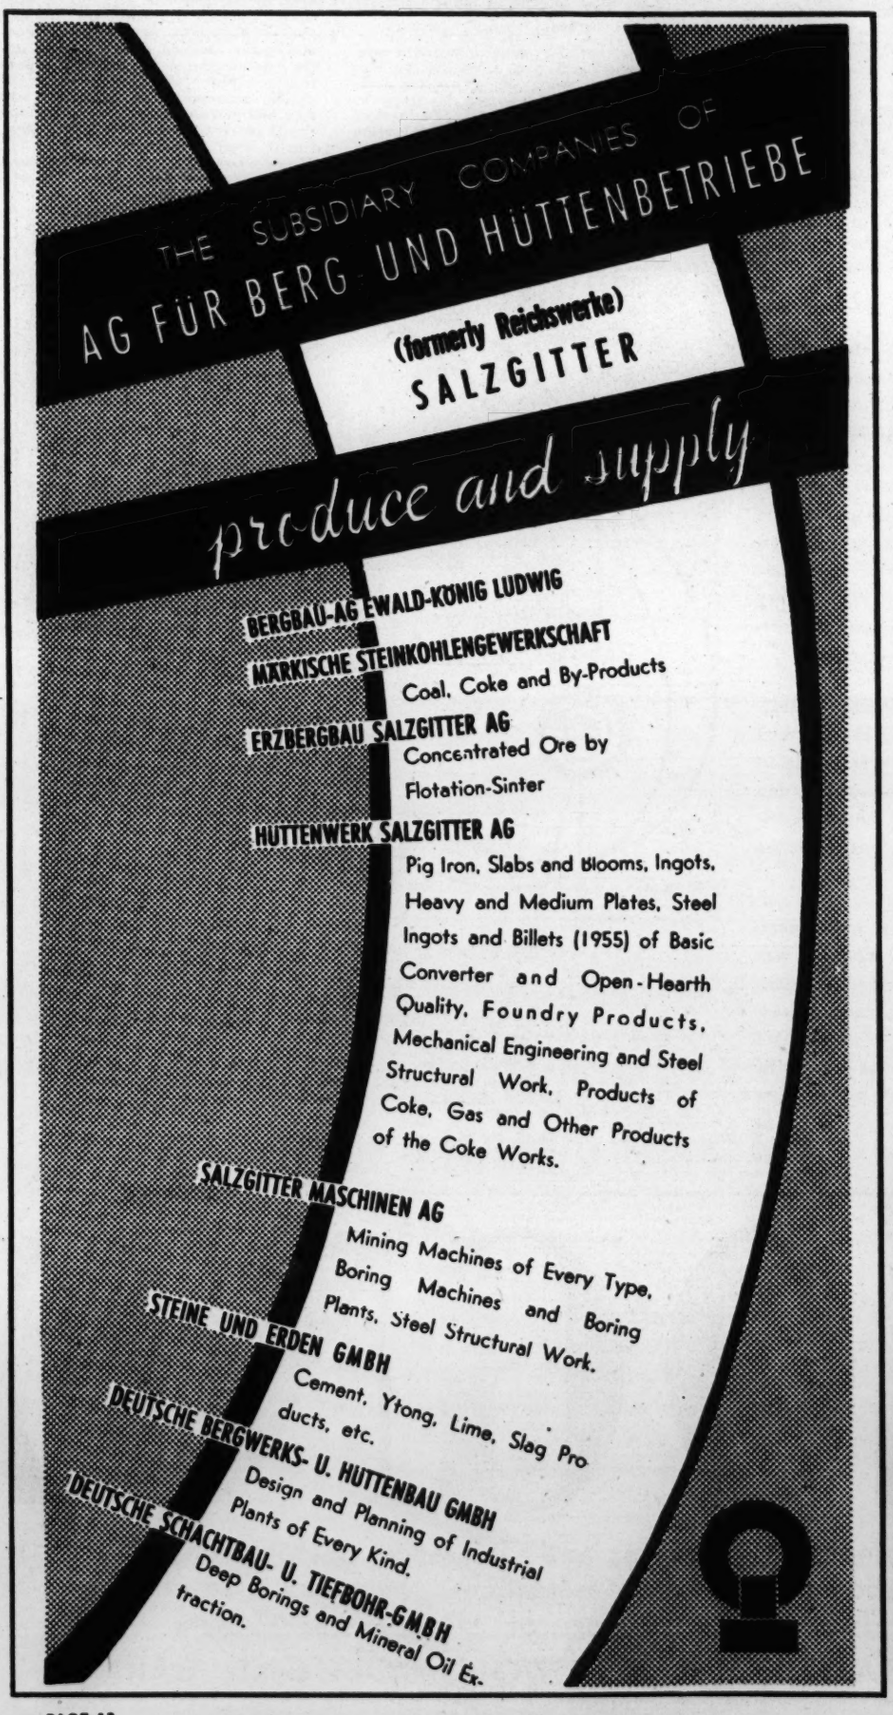
The first started immediately after the war and was notable for its arbitrary, not to say amateurish, attempt to absorb all the new currents and stimuli crowding into Germany. Its centers were the "Week of New Music" sponsored by Radio Hesse and the vacation courses in Darmstadt.

Contemporary with the currency reform, the second phase started. The course it took was just striking. With the radicalism that is youth's privilege the young German composers turned away from the neobaroque compositions of Paul Hindemith, not to become involved as the master himself in a romantic traditionalism, but to throw themselves with youthful carelessness into the 12-tone technique. Schonberg and even more Anton von Webern are the idols of all young German composers of intelligence and talent. As always in Germany, black and white follow in a sharp contrast. Even older musicans who had followed Hindemith's trail up to the end of the war went with flying colors over the dodekaphonie.

While the unusually gifted Hans Werner Henze is constantly drifting towards a refined 12-tone impressionism, Gieselher Klebe is striving for the spiritual condensation of the sound also basing on the 12-tone-technique. Besides this experimental music which makes use increasingly of electrical sound producers, there is the brilliant Boris Blacher who draws from many sources, and there are the artful solid constructions of Amadeus Hartmann, and the primarily intellectual music of Wolfang Fortner who is in constant search of the new.

In the sphere of the musical theatre Werner Egk combines with great talent the legitimate effects of the opera with an unusual modernism, splendid in sound. With clever means, Carl Orff tries to reccver the primitive value of the ancient cultic theatre and arrives doubtless at the most interesting solutions of the modern musical theatre in Germany.

It is impossible to speak of contemporary musical development in Germany and not to mention the dominating part of the six public radio systems of Western Germany. The radio orchestras are not only the best paid, but also the artistically most qualified bodies. In a good competition they promote all modern currents in a pronounced and versatile manner. The fact that modern music today is considered to be a fact beyond discussion, is to no small extent due to the efforts of the German radio systems. First of all the Sudwestfunk in Baden-Baden has to be mentioned in this respect. There Hans Rosbaud has created an orchestra ideally suited to the necessities of modern music. Hans Rosbaud and his orchestra were mainly responsible for the fame the Donauesching Music Festival received the world over, when it took place again in 1950 and in the time since, filled with a new spirit.



Free Germany Promotes Common Free Nations Trade

By Dr. Gunter Henle
Partner, the Kloeckner, Duisberg (Heavy Machinery)

Dr. Henle

The promotion of a union of the European national economies to form a community whose objective is the creation of a common market for the countries of free Europe is an essential part of the economic policy of the German Federal Republic. It is generally known that both Chancellor Dr. Adenauer and the Federal Minister of Economics, Dr. Erhard, have adopted this objective. The German economy itself, i. e., the industrial and economic enterprises, also are striving for its realization at the earliest possible time. It is well known that the first practical step in this direction was taken by the former French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Robert Schuman when he proposed the Schuman Plan in 1950. This proposal found a warm reception not only with the Bonn Government, but also with the German coal and steel industries. That was not surprising, for already at that time the conviction had become prevalent in German industry that the European economy could become really healthy only after the removal of economic and commercial barriers, which existed between the individual states of Europe and which to a considerable extent are still in existence.

The European community for coal and steel based on the Schuman Plan became a reality in July 1952. The common market for coal and steel has now been in existence for more than one year. It is only natural that in this initial period of the coal and steel pool, various difficulties showed up and that weaknesses of the agreement became evident. This should not be surprising in such a great undertaking in a completely new territory with its creation of supranational institutions. To this the fact was added that the initial period occurred in the wake of a certain stagnation which made itself felt at the same time in the European basic industries. These circumstances explain the news which appeared a few months ago in the press to the effect that the West German industry was dissatisfied with the experiences. Expectations had been set too high. Be it as it may, there cannot be any doubt that the German economy now, as before, emphatically advocates the continuance and further expansion of the community. Moreover, the general conditions of marketing have already improved perceptibly in recent times.

Difficulties arose through the fact that agreement comprises only one part of the entire economy. All the rest of the economic and social structure of the participating countries, including their vastly different policies in regard to finance, monetary exchange and taxes has been left untouched for the time being. Adding other products is a difficult task which cannot be done overnight, since we are partly dealing there with various methods that have become customary in the course of many decades.

If we look beyond the narrower group of states in the coal and steel community, at the whole of free Europe, we are indebted above all to the Organization for European Economic Co-operation for the fact that for a number of years a marked lowering of trade barriers between the various states has taken place.

One point requires special emphasis. In Germany the ecomonic union of the European countries is, by no means, interpreted as the formation of a combine with a common commercial objective of shutting out the rest of the world. On the contrary, the goal of a European economic integration should be to find a road to a world market from the narrowness of the national state by way of a common European market.

Integrated European Economy Would Aid Synthetic Fiber Industry

By Dr. h. c. Ernst Hellmut Vits

Chairman of the Board of Management of Vereinigte Glanzstoff-Fabriken AG., Wuppertal-Elberfeld

The creation of an integrated European economic area would stimulate the future development of textile economy including the future development of man-made fibers.

A wide production area and a wide market, i.e. a rearrangement and a tendency to co-ordinate inter-European economic relations would considerably increase production possibilities and the capacity of the market of absorbing goods.

An economic unification of Europe would not only be the numerical result of adding up inhabitants, production facilities, exports, standards of consumption and purchasing power in the different countries, but it would imply first of all an optimum exploitation of natural resources, the development of modern large-scale industrial enterprises offering more possibilities for rationalization and manufacturing economies; consequently a general raise of the consumption level might be anticipated.

In order to get a clear idea of the chances of the made-made fiber industry in Western Europe after its development into an integrated economic area, it is useful to compare the different items of textile fiber consumption in the six Member countries of the European Coal and Steel Community with the corresponding consumption in the United States of America.

The table shows that in 1950-53 total consumption of textile fibers in the United States was 42.4 lbs. per head, as compared with 18.7 lbs. per head in the European Coal and Steel Community. It also compares consumption of man-made fibers in same period.

But besides the considerable difference between the rate of consumption in the United States and that in member European countries, the trend of the consumption of man-made fibers from 1938 until 1950-53 plays an important part. In the United States consumption of man-made fibers increased by 300% whereas in the Eurcpean Community the increase was only about 50%. Due to self-sufficiency of pre-war Germany and Italy these countries already had a relatively high consumption of man-made fibers in 1938, thus the upward trend in these countries could not progress as quickly as the United States. The higher European rate of consumption in 1950-53 as well as the increase from 1938 until 1950-53 in the United States underline the good chances for European man-made fiber in an integrated economic area. It should not be ignored, however, that an economic integration of Western Europe has to affect all branches of economic life and not be restricted to certain branches.

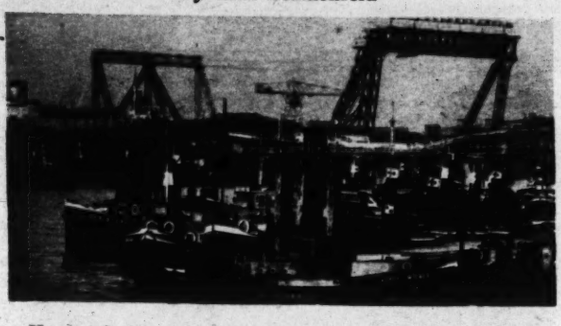
HAMBURG BIDS FOR TRADE TO SUPPORT FREEDOM, PEACE

By Erik Blumenfeld



Hamburg's location at the intersection of the line that connects the German hinterland with the oceans of the world and the very ancient route of commerce from north to south has always determined its character as a seaport and center of world trade. The development into one of the foremost international seaports, into a commercial center of worldwide significance and into a starting place for navigation encircling the entire globe took place in the decades after Napoleonic wars especially in rapid advance in connection with the industrialization of the German Reich and of Central Europe. A few venturesome merchants dared to risk the jump from indirect world trade by way of the European colonial possessions to a direct participation of their own in oversea trade. Thus Hamburg's leading position was established as intermediary between raw materials and market overseas on the one hand and the German and European industries on the other hand.

Through the Second World War investments of decades were wiped out. To this was added a very decided structural weakness in Hamburg's position through the division of Germany into politically divergent halves. Important regions of its hinterland were cut off from its trade, its navigation and its harbor. The Iron Curtain runs almost immediately in front of the gates of Hamburg. Important territories for loading have more or less disappeared behind this wall, so have the traditional economic territories of Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Rumania which formerly carried on a lively trade with overseas by way of Hamburg.

In spite of these facts, Hamburg, made strenous efforts during the last few years to be active again as an intermediary between Europe and overseas. Today Hamburg's share in German export amounts to about 25%, in import about 30%.

Hamburg's location on the border involves a political task and obligation. As is generally known, the Russians in Geneva advocated strongly a commercial exchange with western Europe, especially with the Federal Republic of Germany. Recognizing the fact that these wishes stem from the political strategy of the Communists and aim at splitting the community of western nations, West Germany has greatly restrained herself from trading with the east so far. But export is vital for the Federal Republic. Of 16.5 million workers, 3.5 million are active in German export directly or indirectly. Although West Germany's pre-war share in export has not yet been reached, she touches the limits of her revived export everywhere in the world today, because the expansion of world trade is slowed down and competition for the markets is intensified. In this situation, a strengthening of the commercial ties with the U.S.A. would be most obvious, the most appropriate as well as the most effective device for the economic and political development of the world, but the United States is more and more opposed to this tendency.

The "go-it-alone" politicians in the United States justify their attitude with the supposed neutrality of various European countries, an attitude which is not restricted to the field of foreign policy, but has its effect economically, especially in growing commercial barriers. This policy is short-sighted, for the European states in their struggle for a market are thus urged to look toward the eastern markets and are forced to adopt a certain neutrality.

All large-scale measures of America after the war were aimed at raising the living standards of the nations by creating big markets and distributing the work among the economies of the world. After the last decisions in the commercial policy of the U.S., the European commercial partners must ask themselves how seriously America takes this liberal commercial policy nowadays and the goal of universal commercial integration. The more the ideas of the protectionism and isolationism get the upper hand in America the more the effect of her previous policy will be nullified and the West European countries, especially the Federal Republic of Germany will be forced to direct their attention to the eastern markets.

The spirt of Hamburg is decisive for the position and importance of this city in world trade. To be sure, the citizens of Hamburg are merchants looking for their business in the whole world, but they have always adhered to the cause of freedom. Hamburg's past has created people who have always excelled in courage, daring and commercial initiative. Global thinking is found not only in the old mercantile families, but in the entire population which has been kept from narrow nationalism through their continuous contact with other countries, continents and nations. Perhaps the greatest significance that Hamburg has for the European development today lies in this spiritual heritage. Supranational co-operation which presupposes the transcending of the narrow thinking of national states is the great task confronting us today. A Europe that has been weakened by two world wars can survive only by tearing down its borders, by developing and intensifying its strength and by providing for every production a free access to its most favorable position. The phase of direct economic aid by America for Europe has some to an end. We must now enter the second phase of mutual help through world trade: a vast market which makes possible a far-reaching distribution of work and a steady exchange of technical and economic experience between the nations for greater prosperity in Europe. This prosperity is the prerequisite for the solution of the social problems, for the defeat of bolshevist ideology and for the political balance in the world.

Despite Tuition Problems Universities Overcrowded

By Wolfgang Kalischer

Former President of World University Service, Berlin Branch

Since the days of our parents and great-grandparents, university life in Germany was associated with the idea of dreamy romance and a lot of fun. A great many of the "Alte Herren" lovingly remember their carefree student years and wish to help the young generation to live through them as well. "Gaudeamus igitur," "I've lost my heart at Heidelberg," "Oh, alte Burschenherrlichkeit" haven't lost their appeal and sound as sweet and enchanting as in bygone days. Of the present generation of university students, mostly between 22 and 23 years old, only 40 per cent took part in the last war. They look for light entertainment in social life and in sports, and enjoy a special kind of "student's fun." The true facts, however, are often enough a hard struggle for existence, many years of work—student life, and this must not be left out of a true picture of the present student generation in Germany.

Statistics have shown that work—student activities in Germany often exceed the normal standards. Seventy per cent of the total 120,000 students, of whom 20,000 are orphaned by the war, have to earn their living during the holidays at odd jobs; half of all German students are completely on their own. The lowest average is "normally" estimated at 200 DM per month, but only 12 per cent of all students have more than 150 DM monthly, 60 per cent less than 100 DM for the same period of time. Among them are 15,000 displaced students and 14,000 refugees from the Soviet occupied zone. The latter group cannot count on any financial assistance from their homes. The Federal Government and the Lander have generously contributed from official funds to alleviate this situation. The public and several welfare organizations try to meet the needs of the students in a responsible way. Students themselves have made every effort to aid needy colleagues by granting of loans (especially during preparation for examinations), health service, special student employment bureaus, student boarding houses, mess facilities and assistance in accommodating students.

But despite so many economic difficulties all German universities continue to be overcrowded. In classrooms filled to capacity, loud-speakers transmit the lectures of the professors to the audience; laboratories have to accommodate three students to one working space; seminars, the discussion classes at German universities, are attended by as many as 120 people at every meeting. On the teaching staff's side, the development could not keep pace with this increase in students. During the last few years the Government and the appropriate authorities are making every conceivable effort to train new teachers and secure their financial support.

The interests of the students are represented by local "Studentenvertretungen" which in turn are united in the Verband Deutscher Studentenschaften (German Students' Association). The problem of student fraternities or "corporations" is important and acute. New forms of student community life have to be found. Experiments were being made right after the end of the war, many of which proved impracticable. War veterans formed student groups on the basis of common scientific interests; now, with this generation of students leaving the universities, the picture changes, giving room to different ideas of the younger generation, which partly tends to a restoration of past ideals. Although groups which have established contacts with foreign students still hold their appeal, "corporations" with their traditional colours, duelling, etc., try to move into the foreground, being largely supported by senior members of the older generation. It can be assumed that about 22 per cent of today's students belong to these fraternities. But more than half of the students reject student societies altogether.

It is hardly possible to outline the German students' attitude towards politics in a few words. In general, a certain reserve towards active participation in politics can be perceived. On the other hand, a considerable interest is shown in the scientific analysis of the nature and elements of politics, as evidenced by increasing enrollments in the faculties of economical and social sciences. Enrollment in these subjects represents as much as 16 per cent of the total enrollment in all faculties.

There is a growing demand among students for international travel which helps to expand the knowledge and to form new contacts. Up to now, some 40,000 students have traveled abroad; of these approximately 1000 have visited the United States. But only 8000 students had the opportunity to study at foreign universities. This opens up new tasks and activities for international student exchange. Several German authorities and agencies, such as the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (German Academic Exchange Service), universities and the Federal Government, try to find new ways for the achievement of these goals.

Cologne Calls

By MAX ADENAUER

Chief City Director City of Cologne

If Germany speaks to America in this special edition, the voice of Cologne will sound in strongly and richly. Hard hit in the last war, the Rhine metropolis has become an equally strong example of reconstruction in the post-war years. The will and capacity for quick reconstruction rest upon two fundamental conditions: the situation of the city fixed for 2,000 years and the proverbially positive will-to-live of its inhabitants.

The situation of Cologne on the north-south axis of the river and at the intersection of the continental routes from west to east has again and again brought new energies to it along with the manifold changes of political and sociological conditions. In the centuries under Rome, Cologne was the brilliant seat of administration: in the Middle Ages the rich, democratically ruled center of European commerce and of western thought; in modern times a leading center of modern transport, of the international exchange of goods, and of a characteristic, high quality industry. Nowhere else is the face of the Germany of the past and the Germany of modern times reflected more deeply and fully than in Cologne. Cologne and its great tradition, Cologne's living present, are calling America in these pages and inviting a deepening of relations between the new and the old continents.

Mannheim Rises Out Of Its Ashes

The name Mannheim has a familiar ring all over the world. It carries with it the echoes of an illustrious past in which the Princes of Pfalz, who had fine insight into the importance of science and the arts, promoted them, and who brought the Court of Mannheim to a position of European importance. Moreover, it is alive today with the hum of business and industry that fill the city with a new rhythm of living.

Mannheim, among other German cities, represents a cosmopolitan growth through the last 100 years that can only be compared to the nature of growth in American cities in the same period. Within a few decades it has developed into a thoroughly metropolitan area.

Being located in conjunction with both the principal rivers of the nation (which are big enough and deep enough to carry big ships), Mannheim has developed a major inland harbor at the rivers' junction. The movement of goods in Ludwigshafen, on the left bank of the Rhine, is approximately 10 million tons, equal to the tonnage at the seaport of Bremen.

Mannheim, today, is a distribution point for wood, petroleum, oil, corn, tobacco and chemicals. This extensive industry led Mannheim to develop world markets and for that reason a number of important foreign enterprises have built their branch operations here, both for manufacture and distribution.

It is out of the ancient status of Mannheim that today's industry has developed on world-wide scale. Among leading concerns today are the firm of Carl Benz, now Danner Benz, A.G.; the Mannheimer (motorworks); the chemical industry of Boehringer, the well-known Brown Boveri & Co.; the building firm of Gunnbilfinger, A.G.; Heinrich Lanz, A.G.; Sunlicht & Zellstoff Fabrik. These are only a few of the examples of enterprises that enjoy world markets for their products, and have now for many decades, maintaining top reputations by the quality of their products.

In spite of many disastrous reverses (Mannheim in 350 years of its history was destroyed no less than four times) it has succeeded through the wisdom and energy of its citizens in developing new possibilities today for the new life.

The good humored character of the Pfalz pioneers and their rational approach to living, integrating responsibility and a spirit of work with tolerance and joy of life gave the city a sound basis for the new pattern of living that has developed out of the last 10 years of restoration.

Mannheim presents today to the visitor from foreign countries a picture of vital business and industry, places of recreation, modern living quarters and shopping districts, and cultural institutions, with some of the most famous theaters and art galleries to be found anywhere.

Of course, there's no question that some distress still remains to be alleviated. There continue some worries about the future of the city, but the will and the energy are present among the populace that the people once again become masters of their own destiny.

THE cradle of engineering achievements is as a rule in the large industrial establishments where the financial funds, research facilities and workshop equipment are available for development work. An eminent place among these creative establishments is taken by Maschinenfabrik Augsburg-Nurnberg whose initials M.A.N. have become a symbol of progress all over the world. Within the past 100 years a large number of inventions have emanated from the three works of M.A.N. that have imparted an important impetus to the world's trade and industry.

Diesel Engines

The Diesel engine may be justly called a revolutionizing invention. It was translated into practice and developed to service maturity in the Augsburg Works of M.A.N. during the period from 1893 to 1897. This pioneering work was the starting point of all other types of compression-ignition engines built in the world today. M.A.N. together with its licencees has supplied engines aggregating 20 million H.P. up to date.

Printing Presses

As the second factory to commence manufacture of printing machines in Germany, the M.A.N. Works at Augsburg have developed marvels of efficiency and precision from the first simple high-speed presses of the year 1845. Today Augsburg's rotary newspaper presses, high-speed presses for letterpress and cutwork, offset and intaglio presses are found on all continents.

Diesel Trucks

Thirty years ago, M.A.N. demonstrated the first truck to be equipped with a direct-injection Diesel engine at the Berlin Motor Show. Since that time M.A.N. has continually improved the high-speed Diesel engine for railway and road applications and M.A.N. trucks and omnibuses have earned a reputation for fuel economy and long service life. M.A.N. Diesel tractors for agriculture and forestry are used in all parts of the world.

Gas Engines

As early as 50 years ago the Nuremberg gas engine provided the European iron and steelworks with a means for utilizing the waste gases of their blast furnaces with a high efficiency. The extremely rugged design of these engines enabled them to give satisfactory service for many years under most arduous conditions, even outdoors.

Cranes

M.A.N.'s crane division looks back on 60 years' activities in this specific field of engineering. In the first half of the present century the series manufacture of M.A.N. wharf cranes was started for large ports in South America and Africa. The very latest wharf designs are the integral-column crane and the unit-column crane of which a substantial number have already been supplied to several Continental ports and more are on order.

Steam Power Stations

The Nuremberg Works of M.A.N. has been manufacturing steam power equipment for 100 years and plays a leading part in the design and construction of highly efficient thermal power stations. A specialty is the manufacture of Ljungstrom type radial-flow reaction turbines which have been greatly improved and are specially adapted for high-pressure superposed service.

Bridges

It was in the Gustavsburg Works of M.A.N. where 90 years ago Heinrich Gerber, the senior of German bridge building, invented the cantilever system which has come into wide use all over the world, also in Britain and the United States. In the thirties M.A.N. introduced the plate-girder beam bridge which became a feature of the German Autobahnen.

Weirs and Gates

New designs of river control equipment were also developed at Gustavsburg, such as the roller gate which has proved its value particularly in the ice and boulder laden rivers of Scandinavia and also in the rivers of North America.

Gasholders

Another invention that has established M.A.N.'s reputation in the engineering world was the invention of the waterless gasholder. This type has since been adopted in most countries, the largest single units being installed in New York and Chicago.

What was true in the past still holds good today:
M.A.N. foremost in engineering.

What Remains of German Culture?

By Christine Schodrock

In 1945 German culture seemed to have been included in the total destruction which hit Germany. Everywhere in the world, the question arose, what had remained of German art treasures? Many values were destroyed irrestorably, but many others could be saved from destruction and displacement, because since 1939 precious works of fine arts had been stored away in rural areas, remote castles or in the depths of old salt mines.

Today almost all big cities in the Federal Republic have rebuilt their museums and art galleries, everywhere the works of famous masters may be seen again. Substantial parts of the collections of the large Berlin Museums, moreover, had been brought to Western Germany and are accessible again to the public, for instance in the Germanic National Museum in Nuremberg. But another large part of the art treasures from Berlin and especially from Dresden, which claimed inestimable collections, had been transported by the Soviets eastwards in 1945.

Not only in the museums and collections old German art can be found. It lives everywhere in big and small towns, in old castles, and scattered all over the country. For instance there is Nuremberg where the Gothic Lorenzchurch keeps the famous "Salute of the Angels," a wood carving by Veit Stoss, whose works are spread as far as Krakau in Poland. In the same church goldsmith work by the renowned Adam Kraft is preserved. In the street next to the church stands the Gothic Fountain of Virtue of which the tale says that its water bubbling into red flowers stop running when a person passes who is not virtuous. The House of Albrecht Durer which was destroyed during the war has been rebuilt in its old shape.

To tell of all German art treasures one would need days on end. What Lubeck with its Marienchurch means for the North of Germany, Bamberg is for Frankonia: an almost undestroyed town containing the works of art of a thousand years of history. One cannot talk about art treasures and omit the grand cathedrals in Freiburg, Aachen, Trier, Augsburg, Hildesheim, and the biggest and most famous one in Cologne.

However rich the German inheritance of art may appear again, the art of East Germany where the population has been expelled cannot be restored.

Another question of 1945 was: How will modern creative work grow from the total destruction? Libraries, publishing houses, printing shops, theatres, sculptors' workshops were destroyed. The contact with international cultural life had been cut. It was admirable how immediately a lively exchange of ideas started in spite of physical distress. Especially the young generation went with enthusiasm and devotion in search of new standards. Modern cultural life, too, turns around several centers partly resulting from historical traditions. The area around the Lake of Constance, Munich, Dusseldorf-Cologne, and Berlin have proven to be special points of attraction. German literature is working hard and seriously to grow again into the mainstream of world literature. A few figures show the productivity of the literary world: There are 166 publishers in Munich, 154 in Stuttgart, 148 in West Berlin, 125 in Hamburg, 119 in Frankfurt. There are also numerous annual music festivals, international festivals in Berlin, Munich, Wiesbaden, the Ruhr Festival in the industrial center of Recklinghausen, the days of classical music in Ansbach, Bonn, Bremen, Gottingen, Wurzburg, performances of modern music in Brunswick, Darmstadt, Donaueschingen, Frankfurt and Constanz.

Government Aids Displaced Children

By Reg. Direktor Dr. Lades
Federal Ministry of Interior

One of the most pathetic aspects for the new-born Federal Government when it took responsibility in 1949, was to face the misery of the young generation, material as well as spiritual. This generation of boys and girls, whose first and most vivid impressions had been gathered in the cellars during air raids, was considered "lost" by pessimists. There were two million orphans and semi-orphans, three million youth expellees, more than one million children out of disrupted or divorced marriages, and there was a frightening increase in youth delinquency. Millions of children and teenagers had to put up with unsatisfactory housing conditions, and 500,000 youngsters lacked employment and trading facilities. The German taxpayer's money partly finances the activities of the youth program (Bundesjugend Plan); the Parliament appropriated funds for the last few years; thus for the fifth time the "Bundesjugend Plan" could be renewed. A total of 134 Million DM have so far been appropriated for the program.

For youngsters who could not get apprenticed or find work, the "Plan" offered basic training courses for several trades. Numerous shops were established that way, which on April 1, 1954, amounted to 1095 institutions providing working and training facilities for as many as 40,361 youths. In addition, dormitories were built especially for youths between 18 and 25 years of age, and as of December 1, 1953, 1255 houses of this kind for 80,000 persons were counted.

The next step had spiritual significance. A generation skeptical and disillusioned had to be guided to independent activities and to be educated to become active and responsible citizens. This support was chiefly rendered to existing youth organizations. The top youth organizations so far received 20 million DM for their work. Camping, excursion and international youth exchange in particular have been promoted, and thanks to this enterprise approximately 300,000 young persons have established contacts with foreigners. By stressing political training in a broad sense, our young generation was led to take an active interest in the Government and the political events of the day.

Nearly all German youth organizations are merged in the "Deutsche Bundesjugendring." Along with the big unions, the Protestant Youth, the Catholic Youth, the Sports Youth and the Trade Unions Youth, 10 major organizations are represented in the "Bundesjugendring," such as the German Farm Youth, the youth of the German Alpine Club, the Boy Scouts and the Socialistic Youth of Germany. These names indicate a representative cross section of today's German Youth Movement.

As a matter of course special effort of the Federal Government is directed towards assisting boys and girls, who have not joined any youth organizations. Here the support of international youth exchange ranks first.

Hamburg Industrial Center

By Burgomaster Dr. Kurt Sieveking
City of Hamburg

Hamburg is a corporative body which has developed over long centuries. The port area of Hamburg probably exceeds in size all other ports of Northern Europe. There are many old-established commercial houses and banks in Hamburg and, in addition to the shipyards, a growing number of other important industries, so that Hamburg is also the biggest industrial town of the German Federal Republic. From the economic view-point Hamburg's industry is well balanced; with a number of big business concerns and a large number of medium-sized and small firms.

The Hamburg Senate Building

The population, though mostly from Lower Saxony and Holstein, has by no means a provincial outlook.

In the 16th and 17th centuries, many immigrants from Western Europe settled in Hamburg, many more than in other towns. Their descendants have made an extremely valuable contribution. The city has steadily attracted and absorbed efficient and hard-working elements from other parts of Germany. Through expansion of Hamburg's trade and shipping, many family ties have been established overseas between Hamburg citizens and people of foreign countries, which has further effected an international outlook. It can, therefore, be said with justice that Hamburg has a reputation as a cosmopolitan city in the true sense of the word.

Every Hamburger is conscious and proud that he is a member of an old and free democratic community. This feeling guarantees that the town is a true representative of European civilization, despite the fact that the city is only 25 miles from the Iron Curtain. The bulk of the highly qualified Hamburg workers has at all times shown political discretion and successfully participated in the government.

The Hamburg political system is the basis of the independent government. The Senate, executive body, consists of 15 members; the legislative body, the Parliament, has 120 members. Division of power has been modified in that in various governmental committees civilian experts sit with members of Parliament, actively participating in the administration.

Thus, the visitor to the city will find a real community with an active political, commercial and industrial life; the Consumer's Co-operative Society has its head-office here, and it is also an important center of the German Trade Union activity.

MINING HAILED AS BASIC BUILDING STONE OF FR

By Dr. (Honorary) Heinrich Kost
President of the Economic Association for Mining

AMONG the many forms of mining in the German Federal Republic coal mining in the Ruhr plays by far the most important role. On Dec. 31, 1953, more than 665,000 persons were employed in the whole German mining industry, which, in addition to coal, also produces lignite, potash, iron ores, non-ferrous ores, and various other minerals of economic value. On the same date the Ruhr coal mining industry alone employed approximately 483,000 laborers and office workers. Coal mining in the Ruhr, which amounted to over 127,000,000 tons in 1938, had fallen to 33,000,000 tons in 1945 in consequence of the complete collapse. The tenacious efforts of German miners, together with the support which Germany received in the dark period of the post-war years from her former enemies, made possible a production of about 116,000,000 tons again in 1953.

The realization that the raw materials industries in general are the lever of economic recovery has played an important part in the reconstruction of German coal mining. Consequently, soon after the occupation of Germany, British and American interests especially turned toward the problem of the measures to be taken to increase lastingly the production of German coal mining. Even in the Potsdam Accord of July, 1945, otherwise distinguished for so many tragic decisions, the increase of coal production was recognized as a positive goal. In attaining this goal an important part was played by the German Coal Mining Administration created by the British and American military government in November, 1947; I was its director general from initiation until its liquidation in September, 1953.

The German Coal Mining Administration was responsible for the efficiency of the operation and management of the coal and lignite mining industry, including ancillary industries and business branches, and for the supervision of production, loading, and shipment. The activity of the German Coal Mining Administration in Essen furnished all concerned with a wealth of useful contacts aiming at common efforts for the recuperation of German coal mining, without regard for political objectives. To be sure, in the long years of difficult activity there were a number of fundamental differences of opinion. Often, however, the personal esteem, which especially th quired for each other, made it possible agreement of views. The history of the Administration will remain for all time stantial contributions to the associations ing countries of the western world.

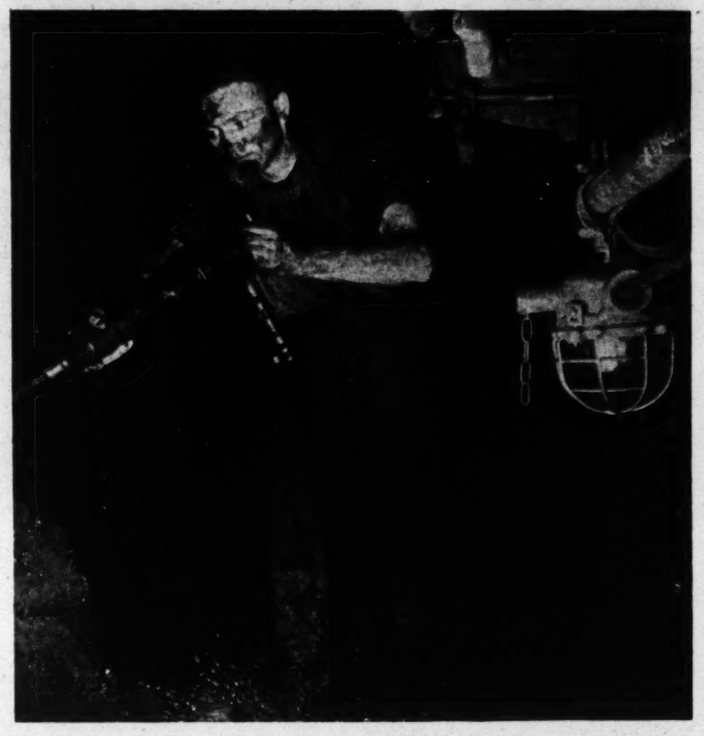
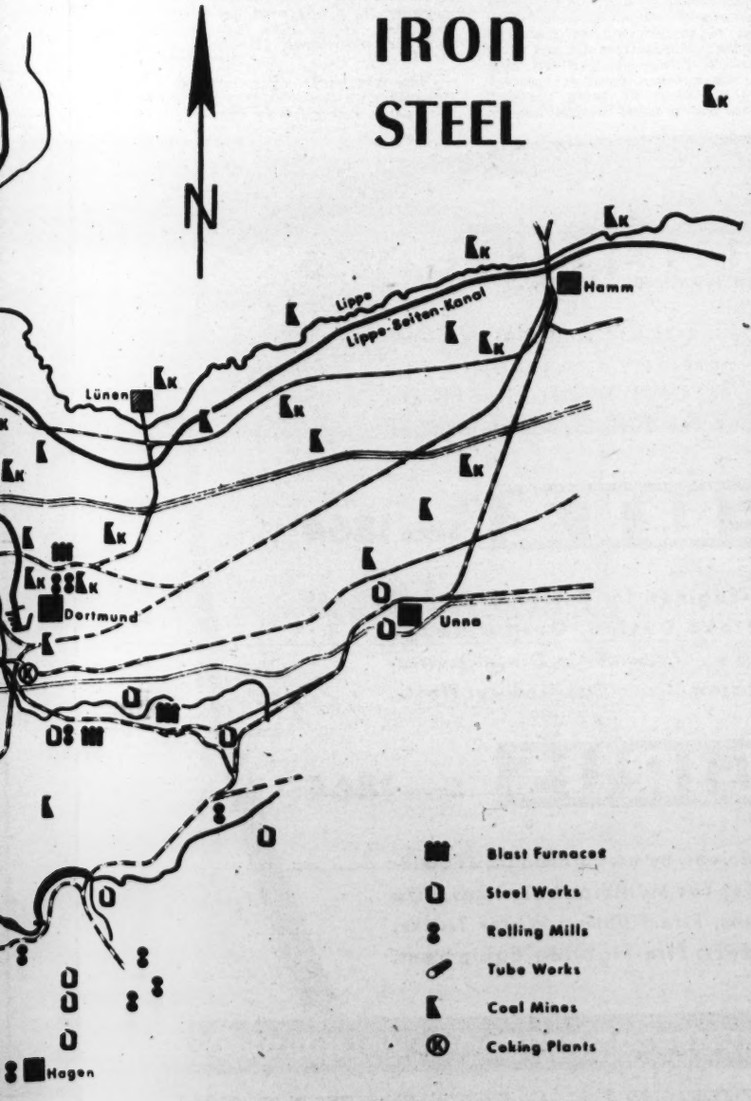
German coal mining has warmly acclaimed the European Community for Coal and Steel, since Foreign Minister Schuman promoted it in May, 1950. German coal mining circles clearly realized from the start that the integration of Europe in the special fields of coal and steel would give rise to serious problems in making it a reality. In spite of these difficulties and without regard for the sacrifices incumbent on the freedom of the individual enterprises through this European treaty, German mining circles felt that they ought to pay a price for the political unification of Europe. This conviction has persisted with undiminished vitality in German coal mining circles. One views the arising difficulties, which are generally recognized, primarily as the consequence of an integration that is only partial. It will be no surprise in Germany, if the high officials of the Mining Union are compelled to surmount further important barriers, which unfortunately still divide Europe.

Nevertheless, the Mining Treaty will not become a blessing for Western Europe until private property and the economy of enterprise are secured and protected in contrast to nationalized property and planned economy. The German coal mining industry believes, however, that a high political goal will inspire all forces to master in common endeavour all the difficulties that have arisen or are still to arise.

Europe must become a true unit, if the people living here are to be as well off as the working people in the United States of America. However, Europe must also become a unit, if instead of a hearth of little disputes and unrests it is to become a bulwark of peace in a world thirsting for peace. In this sense, German coal mining will continue to help gladly and with all its resources, so that it will be a building stone for Europe and thus also for progress in the world.





THE Ruhr Basin is one of the largest industrial areas of Western Germany; in fact, one of the largest of the entire European continent. Its iron and steel industry and varied manufacturing keyed to that are based upon the coal deposits found here, confined in an area of only 6200 square kilometers (a kilometer is, roughly, five-eighths of a mile).

The great coal basin of the Ruhr contains, according to conservative estimates, about 65 billion tons of hard coal, reaching down to a depth of 1200 meters (nearly 4000 feet). All types and sizes of coals, such as anthracite, lean coals, steam coals, bituminous coals, gas coals and long-flame coals are to be found here.

The production of all types and sizes, lumped within a restricted territory, results in special problems which do not arise in the wide space of the United States where coal deposits are spread over an area of 890,000 square kilometers, and where, nearly always, one type of coal only is extracted in a particular production area.

The difference from the United States becomes even more apparent when it is considered that in the United States not less than 25 per cent of total production is by open-cast (strip) mining, and that the average depth amounts to 60 meters, with maximum depth 250 meters. In the Ruhr Basin, however, the average depth is 750 meters and four-fifths of the production comes from depths below the 500-meter limit. Open-cast mining does not exist here at all. The thickness of the veins averages about one meter (39.37 inches) and reaches two meters only in exceptional cases. This means that, in the United States, production may, at any given moment, be rapidly increased and then restricted again, while in the Ruhr it is rigid and less adaptable to fluctuating market conditions.

The use of machines, which has set in on large scale in the United States, is favored there by open-cast mining and thick seams, while conditions in the Ruhr district set narrow limits on such a development.

The fact that a dense population is massed within this restricted territory particularly aggravates the political and social problems of the Ruhr. The large towns of the Ruhr, such as Herne, Gelsenkirchen, Bochum, Bottrop and Essen are to a large extent miners' towns. Any mass unemployment in the mining industry would lead to serious social and political repercussions. It should be all the more appreciated, then, that the strong Communist infiltration of former years could be completely repressed. This is largely due to the efforts of the Industrie-Gewerkschaft Bergbau, in which more than 90 per cent of the miners are organized, and which has eliminated all Communist influences from its leading organs.

Electrical Industry Rebuilds, Makes Technological Progress

By Dr. Hans C. Boden

Executive Vice President and Managing Director of Allgemeine Electricitats Gesellschaft

The German manufacturer of electrical machines and appliances was a comparative newcomer to the engineering market before World War II. He sought access to skilled labor rather than to the basic raw materials. Thus, in 1936, nearly half of Germany's electro-technical production was centered in Berlin.

With the World War and its aftermath, the greater part of this production capacity was lost to the East. The truncated, but still considerable, remainder of the industry found itself isolated in Western Berlin. Nevertheless, reconstruction proceeded apace where a hard core of men, machines, and shops had survived.

The new factories, which were to produce new electrical equipment with new methods, were moved to the smaller towns of Western Germany. Only one-seventh of this productive capacity now remains in Berlin, which of course will be maintained with all forces.

Large manufacturing enterprises, which are concerned with almost all applications of electricity, are characteristic also of the German industry. They can be counted on the fingers of one hand, and yet they produce a good one-third of the total output. Then there are numerous medium sized and smaller companies which specialize in the production of electrical motors, or apparatus and appliances. The large universal producers of electrical equipment employ less than half of the 400,000 men and women working in the German electrical industry.

Our industry has grown by leaps and bounds, and it still is far from static. Generating capacity doubles in a decade, new networks cover new territories, and more energy spells more wealth for all.

The spiritual and material growth of humanity is closely linked today with the progress of the natural sciences fostered by industry. Engineering science relies for its general progress upon industry's endowment of the universities; the application of science to industry is furthered through researches carried out by, within, and for industry.

Thus it came about that, in the main, the big companies have been first to put the results of technological research into practice. But knowledge cannot, and should not, be hoarded.

The small and medium sized manufacturing organizations do not depend upon the big ones. They use, in practice, the results of research and development sponsored by the big companies but exchange, in turn, their own contributions to pure knowledge and engineering practice.

Luckily, human ingenuity cannot be measured with a yardstick, nor bought in the open market. The large and the small not only compete, they also trade with one another.

The renascence of the German electrical industry after World War II was impeded by a prolonged shortage of critical raw materials; now this complex industry has come back to bolster as before the Federal Republic's exports. The best raw materials and semi-finished products are again available to produce high grade electrical equipment. We can claim that quality and design of Germany's electrical equipment are capable of winning the appreciation granted to them before the war.

DR. HANS C. BODEN
. . . Spiritual and material growth of humanity is closely linked with progress of natural sciences fostered by industry.

At all times the electrical equipment industry had ranked among the leading exporters of the Federal Republic, and Western Berlin. In 1936, Germany's share in electrical exports accounted for a quarter of the world's export trade. This position was lost with the second war, and is unlikely to be regained by any measures of reconstruction in Western Germany. Recently, however, exports of the German electrical equipment industry reached a 14 per cent share in world exports. This testifies to the spirit for team work shown by German engineers, merchants and workmen in the industry. We are reconciled to the fact that other industrial countries did not prove backward in filling the gap left open by the war-stricken German industry. We are confident of being accepted again, on our present merits, because we are willing and able to buy the world's produce in the international markets, and to sell there our goods, skills and services.

It is evident that the German economy badly needs foreign currency in order to import sufficient food-stuffs, semi-finished and raw materials from abroad. Today the Federal Republic has to feed a population of nearly five hundred per square mile. It stands to reason that the electrical industry, therefore, has to fulfill its share in the procurement of foreign currency. At the present time our Electrical Industries' share in the total world trade accounts for 5.9 per cent as compared to approximately 10 per cent before the war. In 1953, the total volume of German electrical exports per capita reached a level only 17 per cent higher than the one of 1938, whereas exports of the United Kingdom increased by 45 per cent, France's by some 70 per cent; and the United States' exports practically doubled themselves.

It was likely that the modest comeback of the German electrical equipment industry abroad would create bad feelings, at times. Be that as it may, no cause was given for deploring the methods by which we achieved progress. Our industry cannot prosper by resorting to unfair means, such as dumping, or by granting long-deferred terms of payment. The high rate of interest on the German capital market makes it very unattractive to German industry to enter into a race for long-term credits with other national industries working at habitually lower rates of interest. This aspect of competition abroad between strong national interests has recently misled our foreign customers on this account. Given quality, we hold that the price should be decisive for the acceptance of a large-plant tender, and not the terms of payment granted. In this striving for export markets, to which we must have access to live, the German industry is just as conscious of its financial weakness as it is aware of its engineering progress. We shall be content to abide by the traditional principles of fair trading.

The electrical equipment industry, wherever its factories may stand, works for peace and gains by peace.

Germany Feels Loss of Eastern Pulp Mills

By MAX H. SCHMID, Chairman of the Board, Zellstoffabrik, Waldhof.

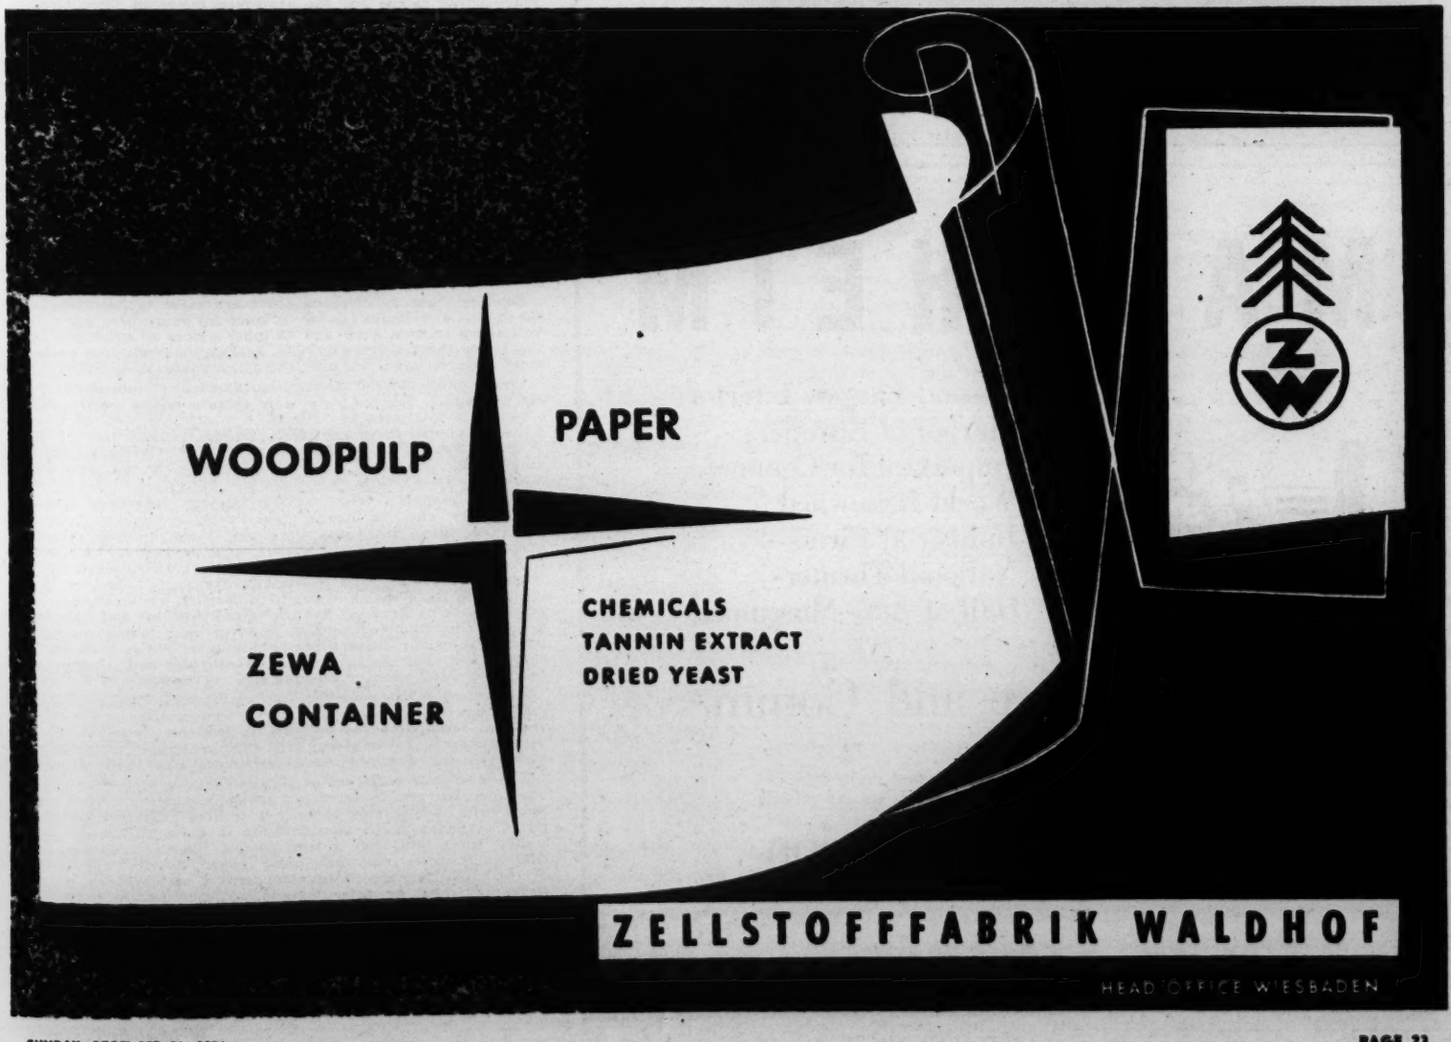
Just like France, Italy, Belgium, Holland and Luxemburg, the Federal Republic of Germany has her own efficient pulp industry. However, while the area of the former German Reich was not only a big exporter of paper, but produced also more pulp than her home market demanded, now considerably more pulp is imported than exported. All the mills for production of sulphate pulp were located in East German regions now occupied by Poland. Total demand of sulphate pulp of Western Germany (about 200,000 short tons air dry annually) is therefore imported, mostly from Sweden and Finland. At long range it is expected production of sulphate pulp will be taken up again in Western Germany for suitable woods are available. On the other hand, an expansion of the capacity for sulphite pulp can hardly be anticipated; even now about one-third of the pulp wood has to be imported.

One-third of sulphite pulp production (about 660,000 short tons air dry annually) is converted to chemical fibres; in addition, the chemical fibre industry buys about a fourth of its demand abroad. Apart from a negligible pulp export, the paper and board industry absorbs about three-fourths of the sulphite pulp production. To satisfy increasing demand, it also imports sulphite pulp (in 1953 a bare sixth of its requirements).

Many German paper mills have sprung from small-trade workshops founded before the commercial exploitation of wood pulp. In addition to some large enterprises, which either produce newsprint or convert their own pulp into paper in integrated mills, there are a number of small and medium-sized mills manufacturing fine papers and special papers. In all a total of about 2700 million short tons of paper and board of all kinds are now produced annually. The formerly very considerable German paper export has decreased as compared with prewar time due to loss of the East and Central German capacities. West German output is not sufficient to satisfy continually increasing home demand. German special papers are still in great demand in European as well as overseas countries. On the other hand, Western Germany has to import some grades, especially newsprint.

Economic recovery of the Federal Republic has entailed a substantial increase of consumption of paper and board. Close economic and spiritual contact with the United States shows its effects, as German people demand more efficient and attractive packaging.

This development justifies the assumption that the industry will find an increasingly large market, and it is hoped will create opportunity for continuing technical improvement of its mills to cut costs.



Free Germany Creates Healthy Foundations for Research and Teaching

By Prof. Dr. Ludwig Raiser

During the past 20 years, American citizens have had the opportunity of seeing what German scholarship means, not only for Germany herself, but for the world. Owing to the political persecutions by the Nazi party of so many members of the academic professions after 1933, hundreds of German teachers and professors of the most varied faculties, philosophies and confessions, were forced to leave their homeland. Many succeeded in settling in America. Just as Absolutism and Political Reaction had caused many liberty-loving men and women to take refuge in North America in the earlier centuries, so today, the German intellectual as teacher and research fellow, has become a standard for wide circles of people connected with universities, colleges and scientific institutes in the United States.

What, however, was a gain for the United States, meant a heavy and, in some cases, even irreparable loss for Germany. One name alone—Einstein—will suffice to demonstrate the greatness of the loss which German Science has had to suffer since 1933.

This loss was further increased when, after the collapse of Germany in 1944, many German scientists emigrated, particularly to America. Impoverished Germany, divided into halves, one free and one ruled by totalitarian power, was unable to keep all her scientists within her frontiers, frontiers which had grown too narrow. Nor was she able to hold hope for the younger generations of scientists. Old German universities, like Konigsberg and Breslau, had been abolished. In the zones occupied by the Russians, totalitarian forces succeeded the National Socialist regime in 1945 and continued to oppress academic life with methods very little changed from those of the Nazis, so that many scientists were forced to flee.

A student sells newspapers to finance her education.

To return to scientific work in spite of poverty, hunger, depression and exhaustion demanded courage in the first years after the collapse. Thousands of young men, however, streamed from prison camps and the destroyed towns of their homeland into the universities. The youth of the nation not only wanted to acquire the knowledge for their professions, but sought also to find new spiritual foundation.

Thus it was that the departments in the German universities relying on old and new teaching staffs, received very strong and new impulses. The post-war student generation has shown its gratitude to its teachers by their zeal for not having failed them with help and inspiration.

Thus the German universities were saved and academic life could start all over again. The reconstruction, however, had to be improvised at first, and could only slowly regain its solid foundation. Today we find in Germany 16 universities. Two of these are new—Berlin and Mainz. (As old Berlin university is in the Eastern Russian-occupied zone, West Berlin had to found a new one.) One university, Giessen, continues to exist, but only as a college with a limited number of departments—Veterinary Science and Agriculture.

Besides these universities, there are eight technical colleges, seven special colleges (as for instance for economics, agriculture, veterinary science, etc.) and 40 other places of academic learning but without university rank. Among these we find ecclesiastical colleges, art academies and teachers' training colleges.

Overcoming the war destruction demanded tremendous financial resources, for not only were lecture rooms destroyed, but also whole institutes and clinics. For example 85% of Cologne University was destroyed; 80% of the Universities of Bonn, Munich, Freiburg and Munster; 75% of Hamburg. Only in Heidelberg, Tubingen and Erlangen have the universities remained almost intact.

In the meantime the heaviest damage has been remedied everywhere, and the biggest gaps in the equipment have been filled up. Some institutes were modernized in the rebuilding and thus increased their efficiency. It is, however, to be remembered that there are considerable differences between the different universities. The universities belong to the ten States into which the Federal Republic is divided. Federalization after the Collapse of Germany had the effect that rich and poor states lie next door to each other, and for that reason cannot all provide for their universities on the same scale. It is for that reason, too, that the furnishing of institutes and libraries with scientific instruments and books still leaves much to be desired.

Furthermore, the number of professorial chairs and posts for lecturers and instructors at the universities are much too small in relation to the increase in students. Most of the university teachers therefore are overburdened—particularly as administration demands more and more time and strength.

The economic situation of the students is also very serious. Their number greatly increased although impoverished Germany can award scholarships to only a limited number of specially gifted students. Much consideration is given to those who returned home late from prison camps. Russia in particular, or who are refugees from their home lands. Therefore the majority of the students have to rely on earning some money by extra work. (It must be remembered that examination demands in Germany are so high that studying for them alone is a full time job.)

There are in Western Germany today nearly 130,000 students. Two thirds of this number study at the Universities and the rest at technical colleges, etc. From the increase in the last few years the Schools of Engineering and Economics have profited particularly. Nearly 30% of all students are refugees.

Sewing Machines Important Export, Home Market Item

By Karl Werner Kieffer
Member of the Board of Directors of* G. M. Pfaff AG.

The German sewing machine industry has always been an important factor in the domestic and export fields of machine manufacturing. This was mainly due to the special aptitude of German workers for precision work.

Before 1914 and even after 1918, Germany's traditional export markets were in Europe and the countries of the Near and Far East; this changed, however, after 1945. The sewing machine industry greatly suffered from the aftermath of the war and was busy, for many years, with its revival.

When foreign markets slowly opened again to German trade, the sewing machine industry was confronted with many machines from various countries, which had been technically improved and which, at first, made the German machines appear inferior. For the home, electric sewing machines were equally successful as the portable light-metal machines and the Swiss version of the free-arm machines which enable the housewife to mend or sew tube-shaped objects.

It is characteristic of the spirit of the German sewing machine industry that it did not capitulate when confronted with such international progress, but that it tried to make its own technical improvements in order to re-enter its old and open new markets. Thus, after a few years, the zig-zag sewing machine of the biggest German factory entered the U.S. market and contributed its part toward revolutionizing home sewing. All other sewing machines which had meanwhile been imported and which were promoted as so-called automatic sewing machines are also based on the idea of zig-zag sewing. Certain zig-zag seams for decorative purposes can be made automatically on these machines. Conscious of its quality products, the German sewing machine industry does not try to conquer the markets by cutting prices, but puts the main emphasis on producing first-class machines.

In the field of industrial sewing machines, there were similar difficulties in catching up with international progress. Industrial sewing machines require more expert knowledge of the technical problems of sewing as well as intimate knowledge of the various branches of industrial sewing such as ready-made clothes, shoes, etc.

There are, naturally, only a few important firms with international reputation. International fairs in all parts of the world, however, bear testimony to the high esteem for the products of German manufacturers of industrial sewing machines.

The German sewing machine industry is not so short-sighted as to manufacture everything itself if there are excellent products by certain specialized manufacturers available elsewhere. Thus, for instance, the most prominent German manufacturers of industrial sewing machines are representing foreign specialized firms — mainly from the U.S.A.—on the German market and there is close co-operation with them.

The German sewing machine industry is not one of the largest sources of German exports, not even of German machine manufacture. It employs about 20,000 persons. The plants are centered in a few areas, the biggest factories are located in Kaiserslautern, Bielefeld and Karlsruhe.

The concentration on export by these factories, however, creates a readiness in the international market to buy that may be encountered in only a few other exported products; a readiness which, in the last analysis, is also a contribution toward the understanding of the problems of other peoples.

WHEN speaking of electricity in the United States, everybody thinks of Thomas Alva Edison; in Bavaria it is Oskar von Miller, close friend of Edison and one of the first presidents of the former Deutsche Edison Gesellschaft, who may be called the father of electrical energy supply. He who is known all over the world as founder of the Deutsches Museum in Munich, the most significant technical museum in Europe, laid the foundation-stone for the Bavarian State Electricity Supply System, the Bayernwerk, which was created in 1921.

Oskar von Miller's principal idea was to interconnect all plants existing and still to be constructed in Bavaria, by a high tension grid embracing the entire country, and to supply with electrical energy at equal conditions, all regional and local utility companies spread over an area of nearly 30,000 square miles.

Starting operations in 1923, Bayernwerk today offers secure electricity service at moderate rates over a network of 2500 miles of 110,000- and 220,000-volt lines and 41 transformer stations with an installed capacity of 2,200,000 KVA. With an energy turnover of 4.3 billion KWH in the business year 1953/54, Bayernwerk covers more than 40% of the electrical energy demand of Bavaria, and thus ranks among the three largest power companies in Western Germany. Its hydro and thermal plants, such as Walchenseewerk storage plant and Schwandorf brown coal plant, are interconnected with the plants of other Bavarian companies, with the steam plants in the Rhineland and with the Alpine power sites in Austria and Italy. Thus Bayernwerk also takes an important part in international power exchanges in Central Europe. A special feature of Bayernwerk's activities is the delivery of single-phase current to the German Federal Railways, accounting for more than 70% of the energy required for railroad traction in Southern Germany.

Bayernwerk, formerly known to American stockholders as the principal object promoted by the Bavarian State Loan of 1927, is owned to 60% by the Bavarian State and to 40% by the Vereinigte Industrie-Unternehmungen AG, the industrial holding company of the German Federal Republic.

West German Office Machines Used Everywhere in the World

By JOACHIM WUSSOW, General Manager of the OLYMPIA works in Wilhelmshaven.

"The biggest display of office machines ever seen!", exclaimed an English visitor at the exhibition of German office machines at the 1954 Industrial Fair in Hanover.

The annual show gave hundreds of thousands of visitors from far and near a comprehensive idea of the variety and quality of German office machines. It would take columns to do justice to all that was displayed for promoting rational, up-to-date office work. There were the "queens of the office", the typewriters, calculating, and accounting machines; and the dictaphones, mimeographs, blueprint copying apparatus, cash registers, and punching machines; together with auxiliary machines, accessories, workshop necessities, office furniture, and all the means of systematizing and transmitting the written and spoken word.

Joachim Wussow

Even though prominent firms from other countries were also represented at the fair, it was not difficult for the visitor to convince himself that German office machines are also again at the fore in respect to form, equipment, and quality. Considering the fact that hardly any other branch of industry in the Federal Republic had to start over again after the war with such a small fraction of its former producing capacity, this successful development in the office machine industry can be truly regarded as extraordinary. Not only had rubble been all that was left of many factories, but it had been especially disastrous that more than half of the German office machine industry had been formerly located east of the Iron Curtain in the areas around Erfurt, Zella-Mehlis, Chemnitz and Dresden. There the plants had either been dismantled by the Soviets, confiscated, or converted into Soviet incorporated companies, the so-called "people's own" concerns. Being the administration seat of medium industry Berlin was heavily involved. On the other hand in the years from 1946 to 1948 other countries were able to make a good start in producing and exporting office machines. However, by 1949 the ejected firms, having become settled again, had so far replaced the devastated plants that the Superb construction and quality of the OLYMPIA typewriters are the result of 50 years experience and research. They are recognized everywhere—Olympia typewriters are popular and desired everywhere. Therefore, half of the entire production of the OLYMPIA WERKE—Germany's largest and most modern office machine factory—is exported to all parts of the world.

Federal Republic could make its appearance again on the world's market. Having outstripped Switzerland and France in the export of office machines in 1951, and Italy in 1952, West Germany now ranks favorably with the U.S.A. and Great Britain. It takes second place after the U.S.A. in its portion of the world's export in typewriters, the latter composing the lion's share in the production of office machines.

Germany's output was around 103 million DM (Deutsche Marks) in 1949. Since then it has trebled, and is now estimated at 350 million DM, having reached 85% of the former output of the undivided German Republic in 1938.

Reckoned in numbers 40% of the entire office machine output is made up of typewriters. Over 400,000 were produced in 1953, 60% being small typewriters. Every third small typewriter was exported. Essentially important is the fact that a suitable keyboard can be supplied in every language for every country. The large typewriter factories also deliver keyboards with special signs for technicians, mathematicians, textile and hardware dealers, dentists, oculists, etc. Models with different carriage widths and extra equipment as usage requires are of course included in the manufacturing program. Special machines for the blind and maimed (one-armed) and for radio and board use are also available.

The figures in the case of adding machines have risen rapidly; in 1953 twenty-five thousand adding machines—approximately 6% of the office machine production—were sold, and one quarter of them were exported. Calculating and accounting machines make up 14% of the office machine output, the remaining 40% being divided between mimeographs, franking machines, letter-sealing machines, dictaphones, photostats, and blueprint copying apparatus, as well as non-printing small adding machines

The United States takes a leading place among the countries to which Germany exports. This may seem strange at the first glance, the United States itself being foremost in the manufacture and export of office machines. It has, however, become evident that the high quality of the German office machines—demanding but little guaranteed repairing and still functioning after many years' use—has found appreciation in the United States. In the first half of 1954, 13,935 small typewriters and 1338 standard typewriters, as well as 4042 printing adding machines with a value of almost 5 million DM were exported to the United States.

The German office machine industry owes the return of confidence in its products not least of all to the fact that it had to begin again at scratch. The result was that the factories, in rebuilding, could make use of the latest discoveries in rational procedure and utilize machine-tools of formerly unknown precision. They were to a large extent forced to re-design their products, and to make every effort to meet the increased demands for speeding up work. The beauty in line and color, typical of German machines, also serves to attract customers.

These preliminary essentials for a new start go hand in hand with building up a comprehensive customers' service at home and abroad. This includes being equipped with a stock of assorted spare parts, guaranteeing the user of German office machines abroad expected service and uninterrupted use.

The German office machine industry can look forward to the future with confidence. Starting with but a fraction of its former capacity, it has accomplished remarkable rehabilitation work in a few years, and its products are deserving of the good name always enjoyed by German goods.

Tariff Walls Worry Chemical Industry

The rebirth of Germany's industries, following World War II, and re-entry of West German products into world markets, has prompted the question as to whether West Germany's chemical industry in particular can again compete successfully on the international business scene.

World chemical production today has a value of approximately $50,000,000,000, of which only about 10% represents international trade. Prior to World War I, international trade came to nearly one-third of total chemical production, a figure not regained. But international trade is still of such volume that it represents a trade prize for which there is sharp competition by all chemical producing countries. By using rather stable years, such as 1938, 1948 and the present, as the basis for considering statistics, comparisons can be made which reflect the German position in a proper light. Thus we can see that in 1938, West German chemical industries were supplying approximately 18% of the products on the world chemical market, and that the United States was supplying approximately 15%. Today, however, the Federal Republic enjoys only 12% of the world trade, while the United States has increased its share from 15% to 28%.

In spite of the almost complete postwar recovery of the West German chemical industry, it can be seen that it has not been able to regain its former position in the world market. Considerable success has been achieved from the year 1948 on. In seeking to regain a competitive position in the world markets, West German chemical firms have been particularly gratified by the good will and personal confidence which continues to exist for them among old customers. It has been heartening to find that mutual confidence built up in decades of satisfactory relations between manufacturers and customers has withstood the severe test of wartime derangements over the ten-year period of the last world conflict. German chemical industries have not placed their sole reliance, however, on the fund of good will acquired in past years. Instead, they have used every modern method to achieve competitive standing in the scientific-technical field. Important chemical plants in our country invest an average of 4 to 5% of their sales volume in research and development and are thus in line with their international competition. It is interesting to note, too, that new products not manufactured prior to 1948 now reach about 20 to 30% of total production and embrace new fields in chemical activities; many of these new products are licensed for foreign manufacture. Scientifically, therefore, West German chemical industries are able to compete in the world markets.

An important factor is relation of competing industries to their own governments and to the governments of the countries in hich they wish to do business. A cardinal question, therefore, is whether competition is to enjoy freedom. The West German government has stressed repeatedly, as have representatives of the German chemical industry, that the Federal Republic prefers a competitive system which is free from open or hidden export subventions. It also seems necessary to us that such a system be free from open or concealed measures which exercise the prohibitive effect of protective tariffs. Thus, European economy has come to observe with growing apprehension a tendency in the United States to support the economic and political trade demands of certain segments of the American economy on the basis that tariff protection is warranted as a means of preserving these interests as productive potentials in the event of war. This tendency, pointing as it does in the direction of economic autarchy, is an alarming contradiction of frequently stated United States principles supporting the development of a liberalized world economy. The Free World has come to attach an ever-growing importance to the economic and political principles enunciated by the United States. Moreover, the sheer weight of the American economic potential forces others to adopt practices in keeping with the example set by the United States. Protective moves by the United States, therefore, must inevitably produce a reaction in other countries which could, in the end, bring about a disintegration of the liberal economic system that all have worked so hard to achieve. Such a development would have particularly unfortunate consequences for the German chemical industry, especially since the potential of the Federal Republic is so insignificant by comparison with that of the United States.

SAVING BY PUBLIC AN AID IN RECOVERY

By Hermann J. Abs

Member of the Board of Directors of The Suddeutschen Bank AG.

During past years the Federal Republic of Germany has endeavored to pursue a foreign and economic policy meriting the confidence of the Western World and, at the same time, representing a contribution towards stabilization of the liberal order. Its efforts in the field of finance were also directed towards that end.

Under terms of the Agreement on German External Debts concluded in London, which the Bundestag by a large majority has declared to be binding upon the Federal Republic, the Republic has undertaken to settle its external commitments in the amount of 14,4 billion D-Marks according to a pre-determined plan.

There appears to exist in the Federal Republic, except for a few Communists, no political party or any influential body which is not prepared to the best of its ability to honor the obligations. We are happy to know that the maxim "pacta sunt servanda" is again receiving due recognition in German public life, and that observation of this fundamental principle will remain unaffected by the composition of any government in office.

In the financial field inside and outside the Federal Republic there is still clearly some scope for activities destined to ensure the application of the principles of law and liberty. As an example, it is sufficient to point to the problem of instituting order on the capital markets and to the related matter of capital imports and exports.

The situation in the Federal Republic is characterized by an inordinately high interest rate for funds required at long terms. This is not so much due to investors figuring high investment risk, or that formation of fresh capital is slack. In recent times formation of capital actually took quite a satisfactory turn, denoting a return of confidence in the stability of political and economic conditions in which context it is only fair to mention the marked savings activities of the public in general. Rather it would appear three other causes may be blamed for the high interest rate: first, the very considerable demand for capital housing construction; second, high investment requirements of public authorities in connection with reconstruction of war - damaged schools, replacement of transport installations, etc.; third, lack of proper order on the capital market, which is incapable of allowing the healthy forces of an unimpeded economy to deploy themselves at will. I think, however, that in the not too distant future we can count on seeing considerable improvement.

THE FRANKFURT STOCK EXCHANGE

A close financial relationship has existed between the United States of America and Frankfurt from the very earliest days of commerce between the States and Germany.

Frankfurt (in the Sixties of the last Century) promoted loans that helped finance the Northern States in promulgation of the military effort that held the American nation intact when dispute over slavery threatened its disintegration.

Mr. G. Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock Exchange, recalled this upon a recent visit to Frankfurt, proving that men of the American financial markets haven't forgotten even those very early good relations.

Frankfurt has always been the leading German Stock Exchange for international, and especially for American loans.

According to its tradition of several hundred years, the Frankfurt Stock Exchange is also concerned again today with the handling of international business relations.

Official Frankfurt market quotations list every day about 250 kinds of shares (chemistry, iron, steel, electricity, textile and construction industries, processing industries, traffic, banks, insurance and all other branches of economy) together with more than 600 kinds of bonds (federal and state loans, industrial loans, mortgage bonds and community debentures of the mortgaging banks and guarantee banks).

Private Banks Recover

By Dr. Robert Pferdmenges

Chairman of the Board of the National Federation of Private Banks

In economic history there is no other example for the magnitude of difficulties with which the banking system of the present Federal Republic of Germany was confronted in the years after the collapse of the German Reich, i. e., since 1945. Its closely knit organization, developed during many decades, was completely broken up. Berlin as "head" for the banking system was eliminated, the three huge banks with their branches were split up into 30 dispersed institutes. There was no unified central banking system, no circulation of payments, no money market nor capital market. The experienced personnel was scattered. Frequently not even the most primitive business offices were available. More than three years after the collapse, initial efforts toward reconstruction of banks had to be made in the midst of a completely disorganized currency.

The currency reform in the summer of 1948 created the basic prerequisites for a regular banking business, but its harsh decrees hit the banks in particular. Ninety-three and one-half per cent of their deposits were wiped out and even the remainder was partly subject to restrictions. On the credit side, the principal amount, in the form of claims on the former Reich and other public debtors, was lost, all assets with the central banking system were canceled, debtors and the assets in securities with fixed interest rates, if they were at all intact, were mostly devalued to ten per cent. The banks were provided with capital which proved to be much too small. This was done through compensation claims on the states of the Federal Government, which had a much too low interest rate, were not redeemable and could not be used. The strong inner reserves collected for decades were completely lost.

Under such difficulties German banks granted at first only short term loans and renewed continually. Often security was lacking. Unusual responsibility was imposed on bank presidents.

German banking has now for quite a while, been in a state of consolidation. Out of 30 fragmentary institutions have come nine solid successors. The volume of short term credits without the inter-bank loans has exceeded 22 billion German Marks and the medium, and long term credits, including mortgage loans of real estate and community loan institutions and savings banks, could even rise to an amount exceeding 25 billion German Marks thanks to the accumulation of private savings.

Capital of all lending institutions included in the statistics of the Bank Deutscher Lander has risen to more than 75 billion German Marks, about one-third in private banks.

Financing Mining and Steel a Problem

Alfred Holling

Member of the Executive Board of the Dresdener Bank and of the Rhein-Ruhr Bank Co., Duesseldorf

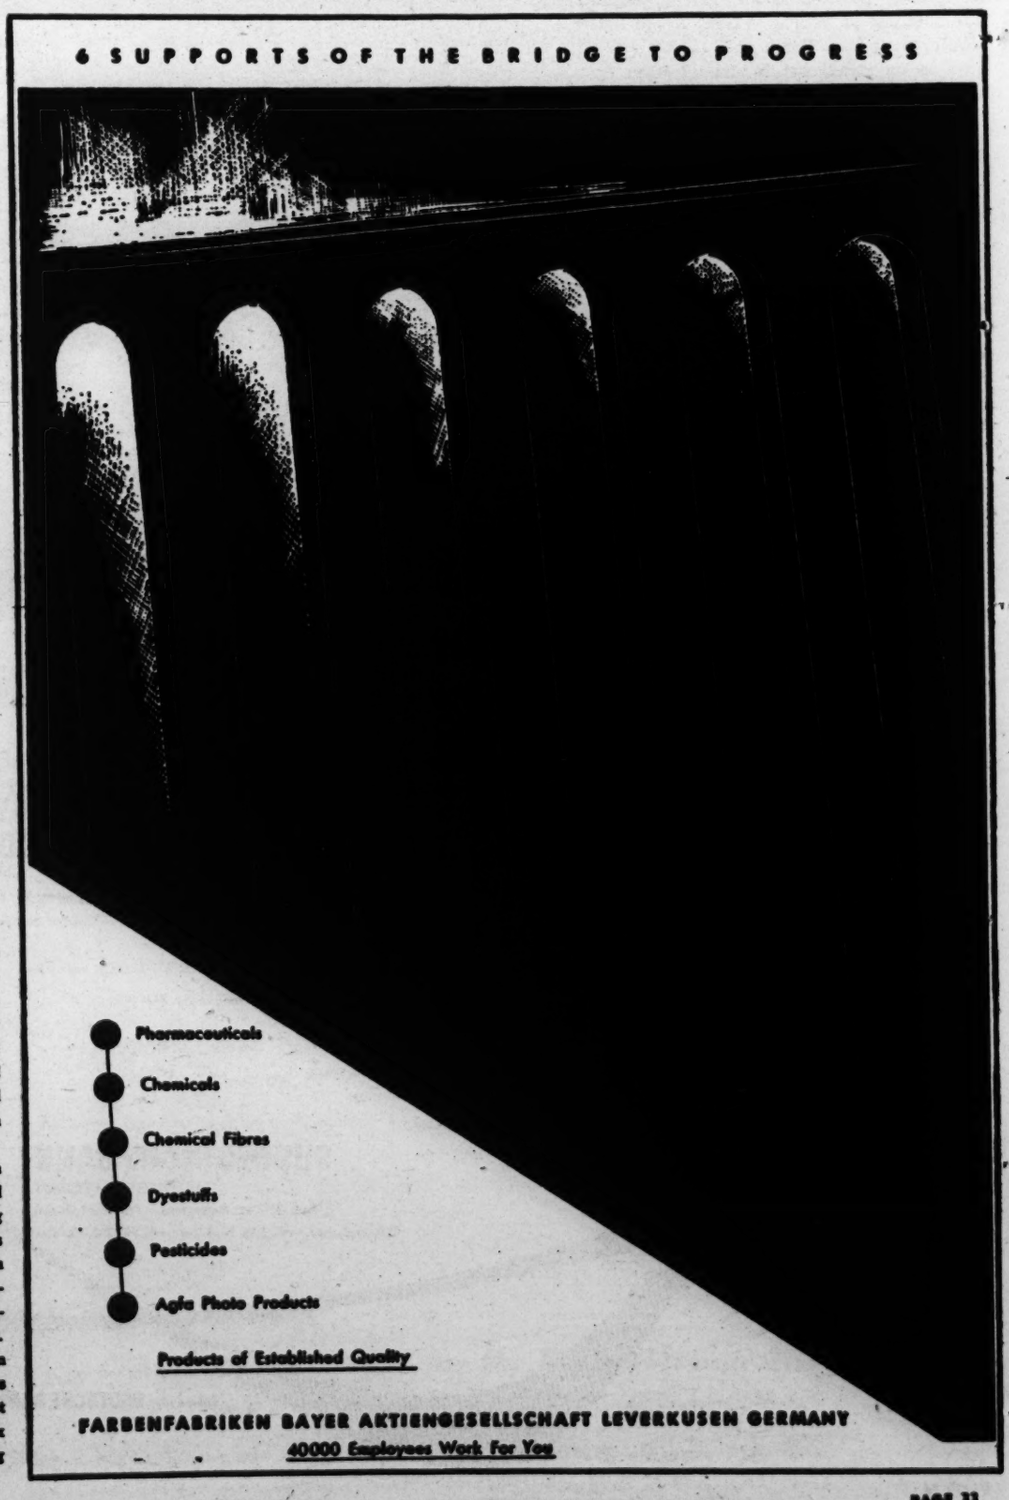
Iron and steel as well as the coal mining industry of West Germany have been carrying out extensive investment programs for some time. Since financing of these can, only in part, be designated secure it is one of the problems most discussed in industrial and financial circles.

Last year was the first since the war that manufacturing in the Federal territory could meet its steel and coal requirements without difficulties. As demand was going down, steel production at 15,400,000 tons approximately corresponded to the figure of the preceding peak year, 1952, and proved sufficient. It was possible to reduce delivery time substantially. Coal production, at 124,000,000 tons, was 1,200,000 tons over the production of the preceding year and likewise made possible the supply of all consumers without friction.

In spite of this gratifying development, investments totaling 7.6 billion Deutsche Marks are to be carried out by 1957-58. If one adds lignite mining to this figure, the total rises to about 9.5 billion Deutsche Marks. Only when amounts of this magnitude are invested will the German iron and steel industry, along with coal mining, have made up the arrears in investment which must be eliminated for them to remain in a competitive position on the common market of the Coal and Steel Community as well as on other markets.

From the Currency Reform in 1948 until the end of 1952, the iron and steel industry has invested approximately 1.2 billion Deutsche Marks for renovation of its plants. Investments already committed require a total of 2.5 billion Deutsche Marks. The total amount which must be invested in the next four years for the rationalization and modernization of production amounts to 5 billion Deutsche Marks.

The need of financing is also considerable in the coal mining industry. War damages amounted to over one billion Deutsche Marks, not counting destruction of coke-ovens, mine power plants and miners' dwellings. One and one-half billion Deutsche Marks have had to be spent for reconstruction of miners' dwellings alone. With modernizing, coal production is to be increased. Goal set by the OEEC for 1956 is 150 million tons. Two billion, 400 million Deutsche Marks have been invested since the war in West German coal mining. In the next few years six new collieries will be needed, older mines being exhausted.



Bavaria Energetically Industrial as Well as Being Scenic

By Josef Bayer
President of the Bavarian stock exchange in Munich

Bavaria, a political unity with a 12-century-old history and culture, is, with regard to space, the largest of the nine states of which the Federal Republic of Western Germany is composed. Although with a population of 9.1 million she only holds second place among the states of the Federal Republic, her territory and the number of her inhabitants are larger than those of many European states.

Long famous for the beauty of her mountains and forests, rivers and lakes, for her monuments of architecture and art treasures, she has since the beginning of this century gained a highly developed industry without losing through this her leading position as an agricultural country. The outcome of World War II has speeded this development from the former purely agricultural state to an important industrial state.

Today, besides farming, nearly all important branches of industry are represented in Bavaria; the center of activities lying in the finishing industry, which provides work for many people at relatively low costs for materials. The volume of production has reached 160% of the year 1936.

Ninety-two per cent of the German porcelain is produced in Bavaria; a large share of it is exported to all parts of the world. Seventy-five per cent of all German breweries are located in Bavaria. The Bavarian electrical engineering industry has experienced a great boom since General Electric and Westinghouse transferred headquarters and major plants to Bavaria after the war.

Seventy-five per cent of special cameras for technical and economic purposes produced in the Federal Republic come from Bavaria.

Textiles play an important part; textiles have experienced furtherance through professional skill and industry of refugees. The entire country up to the last farmhouse is exceptionally well supplied with electricity by public utilities using water resources. The "Rhein-Main-Donau Co.," one of the largest hydro-electric power producers, unites exploitation of waterpower with a planned project of canals.

Besides products already named, paper and paper goods, products of the electrical engineering industry and machinery, glassware, wooden articles, toys and Christmas tree decorations are leading exports. Export of other products, such as machinery, iron and metal goods, precision tools and leather goods, is increasing. The "Maschinenfabrik Augsburg-Nurnberg" (MAN), for instance, is at present constructing for export the largest rotary press outlay which has ever been produced in Europe.

The economic restoration and the expansion of the industrial capacity would not have been possible to this extent if Bavaria did not have a healthy and efficient banking system at her disposal. Besides the three large regional banks, the "Bayerische Staatsbank," the "Bayerische Hypotheken- und Wechsel-Bank" and the "Bayerische Vereinsbank" (of which the latter two are at the same time the largest mortgage banks of the country) there exist important private banking institutes.

Bavaria's insurance business has also expanded.

Bavaria is also the first and only German state in which an investment company was successfully founded after the American pattern.

The Bavarian stock exchange in Munich was reopened in August 1945 as the first official German stock exchange and remained the only official stock exchange for several years. Berlin, formerly the central location of the German stock exchange, lost its importance with the end of the war. Since, the business has shifted to the stock exchanges of the individual states, the extent of the shift corresponding to the economic importance of the state.

The Bank fur Gemeinwirtschaft Nordrhein-Westfalen A.G. was established at the end of 1949 with a capital stock of 1 million DM and started operating at the beginning of 1950. Its founders are the organizations of the trade unions and co-operative societies who set up similar sister institutions also in other Lands of the Federal Republic.

Within the relatively short time of its existence the Bank für Gemeinwirtschaft Nordrhein-Westfalen A. G. has reached a notable business volume. With a balance sheet total of more than 420 million DM the Bank now ranges fifth among 56 credit institutions of the same type in Northrhine-Westphalia.

The business expansion of the Bank necessitated already twice an increase of the capital stock. The capital now shown amounts to 15 million DM shares. In addition there are 5 million DM authorized capital so that the Bank disposes of a capital stock of 20 million DM. Whereas the shares of the Bank are to the greatest part owned by the trade unions, the deposits are now only to a smaller degree coming from the circle of these share-holders. To more than 80 per cent the Bank receives deposits from private business circles, public authorities and other sources.

At present the Bank administers about 330 million DM deposits, loans, etc. As against this about 260 million DM credits were granted to all important branches of industry, trade and commerce. Banking transactions of every kind are executed by the Bank, thus besides deposit and credit transactions it also deals in securities and finances exports and imports. As a foreign trade bank the Bank fur Gemeinwirtschaft has also abroad gained esteem and confidence within a short time.

Bremen 'Quickest' Cotton Port

By H. HELLMERS

President, The Bremen Cotton Stock Exchange

When we in the Hanseatic Free-Town of Bremen are thinking of the USA, we do so first and foremost in terms of cotton.

Cotton has for generations past been the most important commodity of our imports, and for many years most of the improvements of our port-facilities were made with special reference to the quick and expert handling of cotton from the United States of America. As a result, Bremen can claim to be the "quickest" European cotton port, unrivaled both as regards the unloading of steamers and the forwarding of cotton to the mill districts by rail or by truck.

This long-standing general determination to serve the international cotton community was even more intensified after the end of the war, when the devastating destructions of the port and its surrounding areas were so enormous that even experts outside of Bremen raised serious doubts as to whether the Port of Bremen would ever become workable again. Not so the population of Bremen and its city government! Headed by our Burgomaster Kaiser, who through his visit to the States a few years ago has become quite popular over there too, all efforts were, at the expense of all private building activities, first concentrated on the rebuilding of the port facilities. Fortunately for us, the city of Bremen at that time became an American enclave within the British occupied zone of Germany, and most of the leading officials of the American Military Government were farsighted enough to lend Bremen as much assistance and help as was compatible with the changing military law of the day. This was certainly not only dictated by military considerations, but also the influence of the very close relations existing for generations between the U.S.A. and Bremen, which had made Bremen the leading German port for the German-American commerce.

One of the first decisive measures of the American Military Government was the release of about 40,000 bales of American lowgrade cotton, of which at that time there was a superabundance in the U.S.A., but which, when sent to Bremen under Government orders, were hailed here as the first silver lining on a very dark and clouded day. This cotton for sale, for distribution of which the Military Government availed itself of the experience and ability of the Bremen cotton trade, proved to be the starting point for a revival of the badly crippled German cotton industry. Both the cotton trade and the mills have since then gradually regained their important position within the German economy and have undoubtedly contributed considerably towards the economical recovery of Western Germany. Merchants and spinners will always remember with gratitude that this early start and all the economic advantages accruing therefrom to Germany was only made possible through the active and very generous support given by the American Military Government.

Although circumstances force us to now import cotton from more than 30 countries, U.S.A. cotton continues to be our "secret love." Even in such a strong buyers' market as we have here at present, merchants and spinners will generally prefer American cotton at about equal prices, because the greater regularity in staple and character will even warrant a slight premium over exotic growths. We here in Bremen therefore continue to hope that the American Government will succeed in the difficult task of combining competitive export prices for cotton with equitable returns to the American cotton farmer.

In recent years cotton imports via Bremen showed the following figures:

1951: 784,900 bales, of which 475,000 bales U.S.A.

1953: 743,700 bales, of which 208,000 bales U.S.A.

But during the first half of 1954, 281,000 bales out of a total of 579,000 bales have been imported here from U.S.A., a confirmation of our belief that with about equal price levels, such as have existed since about the beginning of 1954, U.S.A. cotton will regain a good part of its foreign markets lost during recent years.

Foreign Capital Shows Interest

by Kurt Forberg

President of the Stock Exchange of North Rhine-Westphalia and of the Union of German Stock Exchanges

The political risks which have frequently restrained foreign investors from engaging themselves in Germany are now considered less than in previous years. The positive development of the German economy represents an asset which does not seem uninteresting. Fact is, during the last few months, foreign capital has shown a considerably greater interest in German securities. A market of a largely speculative character has gradually turned again into an investment market which, as far as yields are concerned, is beginning to fall in with the level of other foreign loans. During last year the values of German foreign bonds have risen to a level which corresponds to a yield of about 8 per cent.

The factor of speculation which stopped many foreign investors from making purchases on German stock exchanges has, largely, disappeared.

Under the regulations at present in force, securities can be bought on German stock exchanges through the intermediary of German bankers by means of liberalized capital accounts (formerly blocked Deutsche Mark accounts), which have been quoted on the international exchanges since 1951. The only restriction is that the dispatch abroad of acquired securities is not yet permitted at the moment, unless the transaction represents an exchange against assets previously sent to Germany from abroad.

The foreign interest in the German share market is largely due to the favorable economic development which continues unchanged in 1954. The favored tax treatment of dividend distributions has in 1953 led to a number of increases in dividends, a tendency which is expected to continue. Dividends distributed on German shares on the basis of a general authorization are fully transferable in so far as the shares are publicly traded.

The situation of the foreign buyer of German bonds is in many respects favorable. The nominal interest rate of 7½ to 8 percent is considerably above the level customary in the United States, United Kingdom or Switzerland. In general, both maturing capital funds and coupons can be transferred at the official rate. Only a coupon tax of 30 per cent is deducted, which is however refunded to the foreign owner on application.

With regard to the structure of the German stock exchanges, it may be added that before the war the Berlin exchange constituted the center. Owing to political developments, this position has not been restored yet. Apart from Berlin, which occupies a special position, the main centers are now the stock exchanges of Duesseldorf, Frankfort, Hamburg and Munich. The importance of the Bremen, Hanover and Stuttgart exchanges lies more in the regional structure of the economic regions concerned.

The COMMERZBANK was established in 1870 under the name „COMMERZ- UND DISCONTO-BANK" with an initial capital of 30 million Marks.

Whilst, until the turn of the century the preponderance of the continuously expanding business centered around the City of Hamburg, the basis for the subsequent extensive network of branches of the bank and its rise to the position of a big bank was constituted by the fusion with the Berliner Bank in 1904.

The following years enabled an essential expansion of the business by further fusions with private and regional banks. Finally, the institution, known since 1920 under the style of „COMMERZ- UND PRIVAT-BANK" and from 1940 onwards bearing the shorter name of COMMERZBANK, embraced more than 400 branches. Simultaneously with the rapid progress of the inland business, the systematic expansion of the foreign business was accomplished.

The collapse in 1945 meant for the COMMERZBANK the loss of the entire business in Middle and East Germany and the decentralisation of the branches, situated in the Western Zones, into nine regional successor institutions. Under the „Big Banks Law", these nine institutions could, in September 1952, be combined into three larger successor institutions in such a way that in the West the BANKVEREIN WESTDEUTSCHLAND AG in Düsseldorf, in the North the COMMERZ- UND DISCONTO-BANK AG in Hamburg, and in the South the COMMERZ- UND CREDIT-BANK AG in Frankfurt/Main, were carved out of the former COMMERZBANK. In addition these three successor banks founded jointly the BERLINER COMMERZBANK AG, operating since 1949 as private bankers in Western Berlin.

As expected, a sound basis for a successful development has been created for all four institutions. At the end of December 1953, they had already reached a balance sheet total of 2609 millions DM, whereas the last balance of the COMMERZBANK before the outbreak of the second world war, i. e. at the end of 1938, showed a balance sheet sum of 1554 millions RM for the entire German Reich.

The over 80 years old tradition of the Dresdner Bank is being maintained by its successor institutions, Hamburger Kreditbank AG., Rhein-Main Bank AG. and Rhein-Ruhr Bank AG. which were regrouped in 1952.

After the difficult years following the collaps of German economy, the successor institutions of the Dresdner Bank had an outstanding share in the reconstruction of German commerce and industry.
Foreign business connections were re-established and strengthened.

The staff of the successor institutions comprises again more than 10400 members.

Tax Reform Designed to Boost Capital Investment, Use of Goods

By Alfred Hartmann

Secretary of State in the Federal Ministry of Finance

Tax reform is as much a daily topic in the Federal Republic of Germany as in the United States. While bills in the United States have already been enacted, legislative bodies of the Federal Republic are still engaged in deliberation of bills submitted by the Federal Government of Germany. The fact that in both countries tax reform was tackled at the same time is not due to the parallel development of policies. The goal in Germany differs from that in the United States.

Ways for relief of the taxpayer the German Government proposed are determined by the basic economic concept of Marktwirtschaft (market economy) as by experiences with existing tax laws. Immediately after the collapse of the Reich, income tax rates were increased considerably by occupying powers by decrees of the Control Council and Military Government. The rates endangered economic initiative and tax morale. In many respects the decrees were based on the idea of siphoning off purchasing power to counteract decline of German currency value (inflation).

Although this reason disappeared through currency reform in 1948, gradual lowering of the excessive income tax rates in the next few years was, at first, made impossible by resistance of the Allied Powers.

Since the Administrative Council, forerunner of the Federal Government felt obligated to normalize the tax burden, while a change was not possible for the German legislators, effort to counteract collapse of economic initiative took the form of tax privileges. The privileges were extended particularly to private financing of enterprises, to saving and to investment for building living quarters and shipbuilding. These measures proved successful and have contributed considerably to revival of the economy.

In 1951 the first successful attempt at lowering the income tax was made. A bigger step was not possible until 1953. Reduction of the privileges was more important than lowering of rates. To stop privileges at the end of 1954 without simultaneous lowering of tax rates would have led to an increase of the general tax burden and impeded further economic development and the pace of growth of the "social (civilian) product."

The new reform is to abolish tax dictatorship with the decision of how income should be used left as much as possible to purely economic considerations. This is based on realization that interference from the top goes against economic laws, mars a healthy economic behavior, diminishes returns for the individual and the economic productivity of the community. The stages of reconstruction in which the formation of capital under any circumstances and in any form have come to an end. Competition between consumption and formation of capital shall now be carried on solely by price and interest in accordance with the principles of the civil market economy.

A lowering of income and corporation tax rates represents the most effective means to promote the initiative for acquiring income as a prerequisite for increased consumption and larger savings. Besides, the Government expects favorable results for the collection of taxes.

In spite of the courageous step which the Federal Government has taken, when one considers the strained budget, the German taxpayer remains the most highly taxed of the Western World. Direct payments, especially to victims of the war by those unscathed by war and the Notopfer Berlin (offering for distressed Berlin), burdens unknown in the U.S.A., are added to the income tax. In addition there is a sizeable indirect taxation through high taxes on certain consumer goods and luxuries. In processing of the goods the tax burden is increased through cumulative action.

Advertising Educates Public

By FRANZ GREISS

Chairman of the Advertising Council "Die Waage."

Germany has an "Advertising Council" called "Die Waage" . . . The Scales . . . with the subtitle "Gemeinschaft zur Forderung des sozialen Ausgleichs" —an association to establish mutual understanding between the social classes. This is an association of German business leaders who have taken it upon themselves to keep the German public informed of the advantages of present day free market economy and point the way, in which economic and social problems of the day can best be solved. At the same time endeavor is made to create a continuing healthy atmosphere between employers and employees.

The association is headed by a committee of three employers. An advisory council of individuals holding executive positions in economy and public service supports and advises the committee.

THE SCALES is not in any way connected with the Government or any political party, but is an outlet for independent business concerns who wish to voice their interest in the wellbeing of the general public. And it is from these circles that "THE SCALES" is financed.

The currency reform brought a "free civilian market economy" in western Germany, an economic system allowing for freedom of competition on a refined and institutionally secure basis, combined with economic political power to overcome tensions without upsetting or stopping the functions of the market or prices.

The public viewed this economic system distrustfully and without understanding, but on the other hand the only way for Western Germany to recover and regain economic power was by the free market system.

The position was explained to the public by means of the newspapers, short films and posters.

A well known expert in advertising was put in charge of the publicity campaign and he prepared the advertisements and carried out the technical details. The task given him of advertising ideas and not consumer goods was well done. This was a new thing in Germany and proved successful.

The subject of the first campaign was: Why is free market economy a success—and why does planned economy lead to failure? This campaign lasted from Oct. 9 to Dec. 31, 1952. A series of five large advertisements, each with two different illustrations and text, appeared in 445 daily newspapers and weekly journals of which 12,000,000 copies each were printed, representing 75% of all West-German newspapers. Numerous articles appeared in the same newspapers in support of the campaign. "THE SCALES" as a term and in conjunction with a picture of a pair of scales as the recognized symbol of justice and therefore characteristic of the endeavor to even-out social standards, proved the main factor for the success of the whole campaign. Another aid was that THE SCALES are not concerned with party-political strife.

This was followed by the second and third phase of the campaign running to September 1953. The subject matter: "Success of free market economy — the failure of planned economy" was emphasized and proved by discussing individual achievements of the free market, for instance investments, building industry, increased output and consumption, value of the Deutsche Mark. Total distribution was 168,000,000 publications.

When in the late summer of 1954 strikes broke out which threatened to spread over the whole of the German Federal Republic, THE SCALES intervened in public discussions and produced four advertisements appealing for reason and moderation. The call for "keep peace at your work and feel responsible for the nation" was given in an objective and calm way without emotion and without blaming anyone, which made it all the more impressive.

The subject-matter of the publicity campaign now running is "Increased Productivity", since increase of productivity, (yield per working hour), will determine whether Western Germany can maintain its growing output of national products the basis for equivalent future development.

They Have a 'Handy' Code for Happiness

by KARL KOHRS

CLOSELY LINKED by warm handclasps, the Andersons go walking near their California home.

ALTADENA, CALIF.

ON A HOSPITAL operating table in a Mexican resort city lay a teen-age boy, seriously hurt in a car accident. Still conscious, he had been brought in for an emergency operation. His distraught parents stood at either side of the table, each holding one of his hands.

Ready to begin, the doctor nodded to the anesthetist. At that moment the boy looked up and gripped his parents' hands reassuringly. As though on signal, they glanced at each other and smiled.

What was it that had given them courage in that crucial moment? This is how the boy's mother, Mrs. Alan L. Anderson, describes what happened—and in so doing she reveals a heart-warming family secret:

"That accident happened while we were driving through a strange town on a vacation trip. We rushed Kent to the first hospital we could find. The doctor spoke only Spanish. We were terribly worried and could think of nothing else to do but hold Kent's hand until it was time to operate. All at once, Kent gave our hands three quick squeezes. There and then we knew everything would be all right."

In the Anderson family, three short squeezes of the hand is a private "code." It can mean "I love you," "everything's okay," "don't worry, we're together"—and the messages never fail to come through.

This has been going on, says Mrs. Anderson, for quite a while—to be precise, since the day Genevieve Dever and Alan Anderson decided to get married. Says Mrs. Anderson, "It happened the night I met Alan's family for the first time. I was shy and ill at ease until he took my hand and gave it three quick squeezes. Then I knew his family would learn to love me because I loved him so very much."

They were married secretly on New Year's Eve in 1935, and for a while it was rough going. The first year they lived on Alan's salary of $60 a month—mostly on canned beans, sardines and scorched potatoes, because Genevieve didn't know much about cooking.

One day she planned a special treat of apricot whip. "I kept tasting and tasting," she recalls, "and by the time Alan came home there wasn't any whip left. I felt so remorseful I cried—but maybe it was more from stomach-ache than remorse."

Later, Alan entered a business partnership and things slowly improved. In 1940 their first son, Kent, was born. The nurse had just put the baby in Mrs. Anderson's arms when Papa Anderson walked in. "I was so happy I couldn't say anything," Mrs. Anderson says. "I just squeezed Alan's hand. That told him."

Their second boy, David, was born three years later. Then came the dark days. Postwar business reverses wrecked Anderson's firm. Little David developed chronic bronchial asthma. At one time during that siege of illness, the Andersons kept vigil at the boy's bedside four days and four nights. But through it all, their handclasp gave them courage.

When David recovered, the family moved to California, and here they live today. Through the years, Mrs. Anderson says, the boys somehow learned the secret hand code without being taught. And now, as long as the four Andersons can hold hands, there isn't a happier family in America. ■

THE COVER

● When PARADE photographer Dave Preston was posing Celia Sue Clark of St. Petersburg, Fla., for today's cover, she had one objection: "I like Christmas better than New Year's. Couldn't I be spelling out 'Merry Christmas' with peppermint sticks?" Preston persuaded her that "Happy New Year" is a pretty nice sentiment, too, and she wound up immersed in a copy of PARADE (r.). Incidentally, Celia Sue is 6 and the daughter of a school teacher.

AMERICAN PIONEERS . . . 1955 MODEL

by SID ROSS

BUSINESS CALL: Charlie Moulin (r.) visits druggist Ed Stiver to push his new venture.

This Indiana family is starting the New Year with a new business, a new town, a new life

FORT WAYNE, IND.

HOW DOES 1955 look to you? Maybe it's just another annoying change in the calendar. Or maybe, like the new family who just moved into 4405 Drury Lane here—a stocky, soft-spoken salesman, his wife and two pretty daughters—you are facing high adventure.

You'd have to know the Moulin family well to appreciate the kind of excitement they'll see in the coming 12 months. They aren't planning to take off for China or the wilds of Africa. They'll be staying right here in Fort Wayne and working nights and week ends on what may look like an unglamorous job.

But Charles A. Moulin, whose athletic build and bristling crew-cut make him look younger than his 45 years, is making an American dream come true. He is becoming his own boss. And he's proving that there are still frontiers in America.

Just two months ago Charlie Moulin gave up his home in Indianapolis, a secure job he had held for 18 years and all of the family's savings to start a small business here in a new town. For the whole family it meant a daring gamble. And, though the chips are down now, the Moulins won't know what's in the cards for them until well into the new year.

"But we know one thing already," says Mrs. Moulin. "We have a wonderful feeling of freedom, of knowing that whatever we make out of our life is in our hands, is up to us."

How did it all start? How did the Moulins happen to pick 1955 as their first year of freedom?

Like most such adventures, it started long before October 15, 1954, the day that Charlie Moulin served official notice on his employer, Bauer & Black, that he was leaving to open a wholesale sandwich business in Fort Wayne. There had been at least five years of dreaming, of looking around for the right kind of business. More than that, there had been a lifetime of building the kind of character and experience it takes for this sort of gamble.

Charlie Moulin learned how to get along the hard way. His real education started when his father had a stroke while he was still in Glen Bard High School in Glen Ellyn, Ill. Charlie dropped out of school and took on two jobs—soda jerk and delivery boy for a drugstore at night, manager of an electrical-contracting shop by day. Together, they brought in $30 a week. His younger brother, Arthur, earned another $15 a week in a greenhouse. They kept the family on its feet.

After three years of this, Charlie's father, Evert O. Moulin, recovered. (Now 81 and recently remarried, he is living in St. Petersburg, Fla., where Arthur runs the Seminole Trailer Court.) Charlie went back to high school and finished in 1931.

That fall he took off for Raymondville, Tex., where he and a friend rented 12 acres of land for $36 and started an onion ranch. "But," as Charlie now recalls, "it was real hard work, and we only made $180 between us from October to April."

Then Charlie Moulin got involved in a youthful adventure which now seems to have laid the groundwork for his new business. In the fall of 1933, he and four other fellows pooled their resources to head west to Seattle. Charlie contributed a 1929 Ford which cost him his last $30. The other boys invested $50 in novelties and $5 in a trailer. They sold the novelties for gas and food money en route.

"We got to Seattle with enough merchandise left to rent a stall at the Pike Street Public Market, and we rented a five-room, furnished houseboat for $10 a month," Charlie recalls. "We had $1.50 in cash among the five of us. We found out we were right at the foot of the University of Washington campus, so we invested our $1.50 in bread and peanut butter and made up sandwiches. We went around the fraternity houses knocking on doors and selling the sandwiches."

From this small beginning, the boys built up a business that netted them $70 a week. They worked in the university dairy for free milk and butter, which they peddled along with the sandwiches. Their stall in the market also brought in about $15 a week.

"We were known as the Hungry Five at first," Charlie smiles. "But we got plenty of butter and had

What's the Economic Outlook for 1955?

AN ANSWER FROM GEORGE HUMPHREY U.S. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

• PARADE put the following question to Treasury Secretary Humphrey: "As the man in charge of the nation's money, do you expect the average American to have more or less to spend next year?"

His reply: "There is one thing I will predict. The dollar you earn today will buy as much a year from today only if we keep doing the things which in the past two years have been so successful in halting inflation.

"The checking of inflation has been and will continue to be a major objective of this Administration, because inflation hurts so many of our people who can least afford it."

lots of fish fried in deep butterfat. For our dessert we'd take home a quart of whipping cream. With raisins and dates in it, it was fine. We got fat as pigs. But we got to squabbling among ourselves, so we finally dragged back to Illinois."

Charlie's next job was a temporary one—driving a 10-ton trailer truck between Chicago and Pittsburgh. Finally, in 1935, he got a permanent spot in the adhesive-tape department of Bauer & Black in Chicago. Starting salary: $19 a week.

Unfortunately for Charlie's financial condition, he attended a young people's meeting in a church in Wheaton, Ill., soon after he landed the job. A 20-year-old girl by the name of Betty Clark was leading the discussion on "Cause and Effect."

"I don't remember what was being discussed," Charlie says now. "I kept looking at her. I wasn't listening to the discussion. She was too pretty."

The result was that Charlie began spending most of his meager salary on Betty Clark. A year later they were married. Now Mrs. Moulin says, "When I think of all the hot dogs, barbecues, french fries, chocolate malteds and shows he bought, I shudder. But it was love at first sight. We were on the same wavelength, let's say."

The young couple got along well. Betty worked in the editorial department of a company magazine in Chicago. Charlie's income rose to $28 a week. They rented a "nice little apartment," bought furniture on time. Then Betty was fired.

Counting Pennies

"WE HAD TO count every penny," Betty recalls. "We used to sit in the car and listen to the radio for entertainment. We had no money for gas. Or we'd go down to the corner drugstore and chat with the druggist and hope he'd buy us a coke. Sometimes we'd rent bikes for 25 cents an hour and go riding.

"Fortunately, we had clothes from our first year. And, though we didn't make every payment on time, we managed to pay off the furniture. We visited and had visitors in coffee klatches, went to church on Sundays and so on. We got along. In fact, it was fun. It always is the first time."

After about a year of this, Charlie got a chance to be a Bauer & Black salesman. "They discovered I could read and write, I've always said," Charlie explains. "But at the time I didn't think I could sell a dollar for fifty cents. Betty gave me encouragement. I guess I needed it."

Says Betty, "I was thrilled. Honestly, I knew he could do it, just as I know he can do this that we're doing now and make a success of it."

That time, at least, her confidence was not misplaced. Charlie stuck to his selling job for 18 years. Eventually the family moved to Indianapolis; Charlie's income rose until he was averaging $7,000 a year. They built up a balance in the bank ("very little, actually"), made a small profit on their home when they moved, paid up a life-insurance policy (and then borrowed on it to pay up the new house) and accumulated some equity in a retirement fund.

During these years their daughters—Brenda Lee, now 15, and Margery Claire, 13—were born. "We had a nice house in Indianapolis—all paid for," says Betty. "We lived nicely—but not extravagantly. I've always made the kids' clothes and some of my own as well as my curtains and slip covers. We visited, went to plays and concerts and occasionally a dance. Or we'd stay home and watch TV or play Scrabble with the girls. It wasn't real exciting, but we enjoyed life and enjoyed our family."

But Charlie had reached a dead end. The only place he could go was to district sales manager. "That's not for me. I'd have to travel, and I like my home and wife and kids," he says. "Anyway, every salesman is a prospective ulcer patient, I think—and, with a district manager, it's a pretty sure bet."

So the Moulins started looking around for a business. Last February a friend of theirs, Glenn Puckett, a retired Max Factor salesman, went into the Stewart In-fra-red Commissary business in Indianapolis. That gave the Moulins their lead.

Here's how this business works. You buy a franchise from the Stewart Co., under which you agree to purchase so many ovens for a given territory. Then you lend these ovens free of charge to taverns, drugstores and luncheonettes whose proprietors will purchase sandwiches—hot dogs, cheese, beef, ham, etc.—from you. The sandwiches are delivered in sealed, cellophane bags. All the proprietor has to do is stick them in the oven. In three minutes, he can serve a sanitary, toasted sandwich for 20 to 35 cents.

Charlie and Betty looked over Puckett's setup and liked what they saw. (Charlie, you'll remember, was an old hand at the sandwich business.) Then they held a full-scale family discussion with the girls, hashing over all the pros and cons. Finally they made the plunge. The whole thing—franchise, equipment and building—cost about $12,000. It took all of their savings to make the initial payments.

"It's funny," says Betty. "The last day Charlie worked at B & B, when he came home we just went for a walk and kept laughing and giggling at each other. 'Ha! Ha! We're unemployed! We're unemployed!' we'd say. Somehow it seemed kind of exhilarating. It was like being up on a cloud."

Though "16 things went wrong" in their moving, the Moulins managed to get settled in their comfortable new seven-room home in suburban Fort Wayne. The girls found new friends quickly. Charlie and Betty went to work.

"It's been a real family project, right from the beginning," says Charlie. "Betty manages the office and commissary while I do the placing and selling. The girls help out on week ends. And they set the table, light the oven and take care of their rooms before we get home, so housework is no problem."

As to the eventual outcome of the business, Charlie says, "I'm setting my sights for 2,400 dozen sandwiches a week. I think, with time, I'll make it. I hope to get to the point where I'll make about $15,000 net, after taxes. That'll be good enough for us. We don't want to get rich."

But what of right now? What of 1955?

Mrs. Moulin puts it this way: "Everything isn't just going to be rosy. We've got a lot of bills that will be coming due, and I only hope we can pay them. But we're not afraid of what lies ahead.

"The way it hits me, I feel like we're pioneers. It's terrific. And it's such darned good fun working together. There's so much more richness and flavor in the few hours we have with each other every evening."

And Charlie Moulin adds: "Of course, we can't be sure whether we'll succeed or fail, but we think we'll succeed. At least, if there's grief, it'll be our grief. And if there are profits, they will be our profits. We're reasonably optimistic. We've got a lot of faith in the future and a lot of faith in the country."

That faith runs through the whole family. Says daughter Brenda: "It's got to succeed. If the worst comes to the worst, Margie and I can work after school."

Adds Margie: "My Dad can do anything." ■

FRIENDLY neighbors make Moulins feel at home. Even if business fails, they like being in Fort Wayne.

Do You Make These Mistakes in English?

Sherwin Cody's remarkable invention has enabled more than 150,000 people to correct their mistakes in English. Only 15 minutes a day required to improve your speech and writing.

MANY persons use such expressions as "Leave them lay there" and "Mary was invited as well as myself." Still others say "between you and I" instead of "between you and me." It is astonishing how often "who" is used for "whom" and how frequently we hear such glaring mispronunciatons as "forMIDable," "aveNOO," and "incomPAREable." Few know whether to spell certain words with one or two "c's" or "m's" or "r's" or with "ie" or "ei," and when to use commas in order to make their meaning absolutely clear. Most persons use only common words — colorless, flat, ordinary. Their speech and their letters are lifeless, monotonous, humdrum.

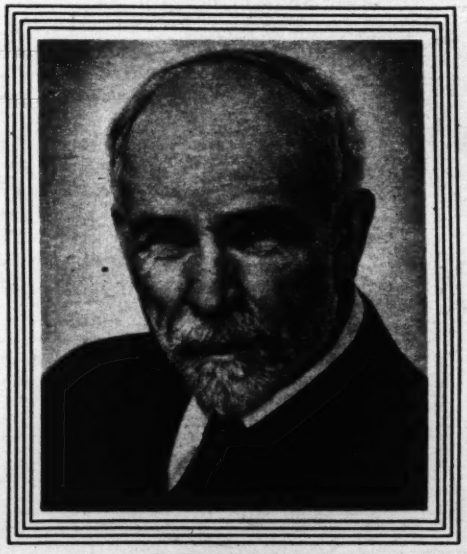
Why Most People Make Mistakes

What is the reason so many of us are deficient in the use of English and find our careers stunted in consequence? Why is it some cannot spell correctly and others cannot punctuate? Why do so many find themselves at a loss for words to express their meaning adequately? The reason for the deficiency is clear. Sherwin Cody discovered it in scientific tests, which he gave thousands of times. Most persons do not write or speak good English, simply because they never formed the habit of doing so.

What Cody Did at Gary

The formation of any habit comes only from constant practice. Shakespeare, you may be sure, never studied rules. No one who writes and speaks correctly thinks of rules when he is doing so.

Here is our mother tongue, a language that has built up our civilization, and without which we should all still be muttering savages! Yet some schools, by wrong methods, have made it a study to be avoided—the hardest of tasks instead of the most fascinating of games! For years it has been a crying disgrace.



SHERWIN CODY

In that point lies the real difference between Sherwin Cody and these schools! Here is an illustration: Some time ago Mr. Cody was invited by the author of the famous Gary System of Education to teach English to all upper-grade pupils in Gary, Indiana. By means of unique practice exercises, Mr. Cody secured more improvement in these pupils in five weeks than previously had been obtained by similar pupils in two years under the old methods. There was no guesswork about these results. They were proved by scientific comparisons. Amazing as this improvement was, more interesting still was the fact that the children were "wild" about the study. It was like playing a game!

The basic principle of Mr. Cody's famous method is habit-forming. Anyone can learn to write and speak correctly by constantly using the correct forms. But how is one to know in each case what is correct? Mr. Cody solves this problem in a simple, unique, sensible way.

100% Self-Correcting Device

Suppose he himself were standing forever at your elbow. Every time you mispronounced or misspelled a word, every time you violated correct grammatical usage, every time you used the wrong word to express what you meant, suppose you could hear him whisper: "That is wrong, it should be thus and so." In a short time you would habitually use the correct forms and the right words in speaking and writing.

If you continued to make the same mistakes, over and over again, each time patiently he would tell you what was right. He would, as it were, be an everlasting mentor beside you — a mentor who would not laugh at you, but who would, on the contrary, support and help you. The 100% Self-Correcting Device does exactly this. It is Mr. Cody's silent voice behind you, ready to speak out whenever you commit an error. It finds your mistakes and concentrates on them. You do not need to study anything you already know. There are no rules to memorize.

Only 15 Minutes a Day

When the study of English is made so simple, it becomes clear that progress can be made in a very short time. No more than fifteen minutes a day is required! Fifteen minutes, not of study, but of fascinating practice.

Sherwin Cody has placed an excellent command of the English language within the grasp of everyone. Those who take advantage of his method gain something so priceless that it cannot be measured in terms of money. They gain a mark of breeding that cannot be erased as long as they live. They gain a facility in speech that marks them as educated people in whatever society they find themselves. They gain the self-confidence and self-respect which this ability inspires. As for material reward, certainly the importance of good English in the race for success cannot be overestimated. Surely no one can advance far without it.

Helps In His Work

"I had no idea when I first started my study that a correspondence course could be so comprehensive, thoroughly honest, and personal as I found yours to be. I am entirely satisfied with it, and I cannot praise it too highly. I know it has already helped me with my editorial work." — GEORGE A. LYON, 815-A Gaston St., S. W., Atlanta, Ga.

"Worth Many Times Its Cost"

"I give this testimony that your Course has been of great help to me in pronunciation and grammar. It is simple and yet covers all the ground in a very efficient manner. Its value to me is worth many times its cost."—THE REV. NIELS P. THOMSEN, 1009 Auburn Place, N. W., Canton 3, Ohio.

Overcomes Inferiority Complex

"It has helped me a great deal, and it has given me an added sense of security when addressing other persons. It is surprising to find how lax one becomes in the use of English, especially when one has been out of school for some years. My mind and ambition had become somewhat stagnant, and I suffered from an inferiority complex. Mr. Cody's lessons have been of great help to me in overcoming these weaknesses, for which I am thankful."—MRS. VERNE CUNNINGHAM, 608 W. Emerson, Monterey Park, Calif.

"Stepping Stone To Advancement"

"The course was a stepping stone for me. Soon after I enrolled I was promoted to Chief Clerk. Later the Course was invaluable in helping me pass the bar examination; 67% failed. Also aided me in passing a number of Civil Service examinations." — ALBERT F. NEBELSICK, Route 2, Sunman, Ind.

"A Short-Cut"

"The course offers such a simplified way to learn that it has been a real joy to study. For a busy person, a short-cut to knowledge is really needed. I felt a little sad when the last lesson was received, so I am reviewing the lessons from the beginning."—MRS. GERTRUDE GALYON, Martha Washington Inn, Abingdon, Va.

PARTY SNACK bowl invites guests to nibble—and nibble again. A word to the wise: make enough Party Snack to keep bowl filled.

A Happy New Year to All!

WHETHER YOU plan to keep Open House on New Year's Eve or New Year's Day, these refreshments will please guests of all ages. You can prepare the fruit-juice-and-tea base for the punch well ahead of time (in fact, the flavor improves with long chilling), adding the ginger ale at the last minute. The pretty fruited ice ring to embellish the big punch bowl can be made the day before. And so can the Party Snack.

GINGER FRUIT PUNCH

3 cups strong tea
2 cups apple cider
2 cups grapefruit juice
1 cup lime juice
1 cup orange juice
1 cup pineapple juice
3 cups sugar sirup*
2 quarts dry ginger ale

Combine tea, cider, fruit juices and sugar sirup. Chill. Pour into large punch bowl. Add ginger ale and fruited ice ring. Makes about 50 punch-cup servings.

* Sugar sirup
Combine 1½ cups each sugar and water; stir over low heat until sugar dissolves; bring to boil; boil 5 minutes. Cool.

FRUITED ICE RING

Arrange red and green Maraschino cherries in bottom of 8" ring mold. Add just enough water to cover bottom of mold; freeze firm. Fill mold with crushed ice, then gently pour in cold water until it reaches the top. Freeze firm. To remove wreath, let stand at room temperature a few minutes, or run lukewarm water over bottom of mold.

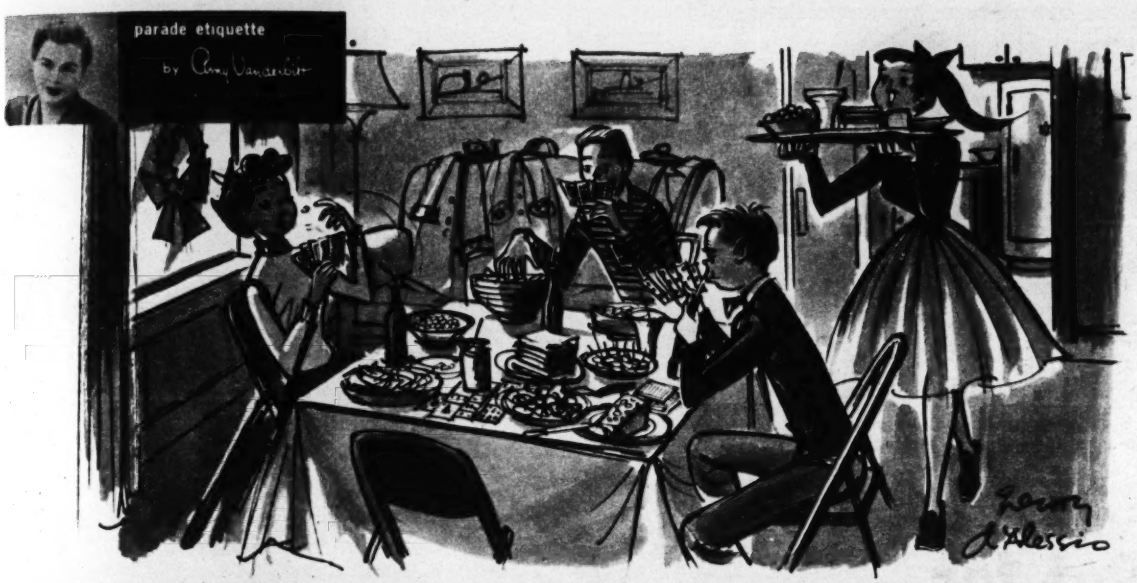
PARTY SNACK

⅓ cup butter or margarine
1½ tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon garlic salt or powder
¼ teaspoon bottled hot pepper sauce
2 cups bite-size shredded wheat cereal
2 cups bite-size shredded rice cereal
1 cup pretzel sticks
1 cup salted peanuts

Melt butter or margarine; stir in Worcestershire sauce, paprika, salt, garlic salt and hot pepper sauce. Pour cereals, pretzel sticks and peanuts into large, shallow pan; add butter mixture; mix gently with a fork until all pieces are coated. Heat in slow oven (300°F.) 30 minutes, stirring gently every 10 minutes. Cool.

KITCHEN HINT:

Spread paper toweling on work surface to receive peelings, scraps, etc. When finished, gather up and discard.



YOUNG HOSTESSES be warned: when serving food to card-playing guests, don't make the "spread" too fancy.

Problems of the 'Awkward Age'

Amy Vanderbilt discusses parties, clothes and keeping friendships

TEENAGERS are particularly acute on the subject of etiquette and ask many questions concerning it. Here are some recent examples from PARADE readers:

Q. I am 16 and have a friend who hasn't been taught things concerning cleanliness at home. I feel, as her most intimate friend, I should try to help her along these lines. But when I approach her it seems I am too blunt and she is hurt. How should I bring up this tender subject?—P.C.I., Little Rock, Ark.

A. Don't—in so many words. Put yourself in your friend's place. You wouldn't like to be told that you needed a manicure, that your hair could do with more frequent shampooing, that your shoulder straps are soiled. In telling your friend these things, no matter how kind your intentions, you make her feel inferior and resistant to your advice.

Instead, why not suggest that you do some of these things together? Ask her to give you a shampoo and help you with your hair; then you do the same for her. Give yourselves manicures together, and perhaps ask her to help straighten up your bureau drawers. Make her feel that she does know these things, and you will find that she will take pains to acquire any knowledge that you can tactfully give her without seeming to preach. Learning these things at your age can be a lot of fun—and beau-catching, too. Your friend is sure to find that out in time and want desperately to be as attractive as possible.

Q. When friends and guests come to your home to spend the evening watching television or playing cards, is it expected of the host or hostess to serve refreshments? —B.C.B., Columbus, O.

A. It is usual to offer something informally—soft drinks, cookies, perhaps a cheese tray, so long as the serving of these things doesn't interrupt the viewing or the card-playing. On certain occasions a late supper is served. Do what your friends customarily do—don't try to do something more elaborate, as this may make them feel obligated to entertain in the same way each time you visit them.

Q. I am a girl 15 years old. I have been invited by a boy to go to a nearby city to a Saturday matinee. May I wear a suit and go without a hat? Should I change if we go out to dinner afterward? I never wear a hat except to church on Sunday.—J.McC., Knoxville, Tenn.

A. A dressmaker suit, wool or otherwise, would be quite proper, if you have the kind of coat that will go over it without making it seem bulky. A fur (real or imitation) jacket is ideal, as is a loose-fitting tuxedo-type coat. You may go without a hat, but you would feel a little more dressed up in a pretty one—especially if he should take you to dinner.

If the suit you choose is definitely not the sport type, it should carry you through the evening. Changing in town would be awkward, even if you have the facilities, and not necessary, actually, unless you are going dancing. In this case your escort will be sure to say something about it well in advance.

Q. I am 16 and am going to have my first tuxedo. My father is holding out for the usual black but I would like to have midnight blue. He thinks that's just a fad and that I'll be sorry, but we agreed to abide by your decision.—C.C., Oakland, Calif.

A. Midnight blue for tuxedos is not a fad. It has been an established fashion for some seasons now. It looks blacker than black at night, and you are much more likely to outgrow your tuxedo than to outgrow the fashion for midnight blue.

Q. In bad weather, when girls have to wear storm boots to parties, should the boys help them off and on with them?—M.I.S., Portland, Me.

A. Yes, especially if these are removed out of doors (on the porch or in a lobby). If the girls have a separate dressing room where they are asked to remove their outer things, including storm boots, the boys of course do not follow them there to assist them.

Neither does a girl who has removed her storm boots in the dressing room appear with them in her hand, at departure time, to get her escort's assistance. If he is something less than crazy about her, he may consider her a nuisance at a moment when he has many things to think of himself—saying his goodbyes, collecting his own belongings, getting the car, etc.

POINTING like a dog, Alice sniffs at grapes with her long, sensitive nose. Other favorite coati foods are chicken, eggs.

A New Pet for Your Back Yard?

ALHAMBRA, CALIF.

SCENES LIKE THESE will be common all over America if David Dodge, a local pet lover, has his way. Recently, as an experiment, he added a South American coati-mundi named Alice to his household menagerie (cat, dog and honey bear). It made him a confirmed coati-mundi fan.

He claims Alice makes almost the ideal pet. About the size of a small dog, with the tail of a raccoon and the long flexible snout of an ant-eater, the coati is intelligent and clean, gets along good-naturedly with people and other animals. And Alice does some tricks few other pets can do—such as letting herself be tossed hoop-fashion in the air, tightrope walking along Mrs. Dodge's clotheslines and jumping for insects.

Encouraged by envious neighbors, Dodge formed the Coati-mundi Company, plans to import more to sell for $40 each. ■

Tossed in the air, Alice gets a grip on herself and whirls like a ring-tailed hoop. When she stops spinning, she lands neatly in owner Dodge's hands.

The Jokes They Made in 1954!

PARADE's columnist brings back some of the year's best quips

TO THIS working columnist, the best wisecracks of '54 stemmed from the front-page exploits of famed personalities in politics, society, sports, fashion and the make-believe world of funtertainment. Here are some memorable examples:

When Porfirio Rubirosa announced that his marriage to Barbara Hutton was a failure, Bob Hope recast the old wheeze with: "Barbara seems to have more trouble with her foreign relations than our State Department." . . . Jack Benny went to a Hollywood wedding where the bride kept staring at the groom. "You look so familiar," she muttered. "Haven't we married somewhere before?" . . .

Drive-in theaters attained such popularity that one near New York was reported offering a Monday Night Family Special—$1.25 per carload . . . With the death of 3-D movies, those cheap imitation-Polaroid glasses were advertised for sale at a 42nd Street shop as "A Novel Gift for Two-Faced Friends." . . . Television's impact on the small fry gained momentum. During a spelling bee in a Brooklyn school, every kid in the class failed on the same word: does. They all spelled it D-U-Z . . .

A Los Angeles roadside inn named itself "The No-Tel Motel" and a fire-prevention billboard on a New Jersey highway shouted, "Never let a match go out alone—it has a head but can't think." . . . After Paris announced its newest fashion, comedian Joe E. Lewis met a garage attendant who fixed flats for Dior . . .

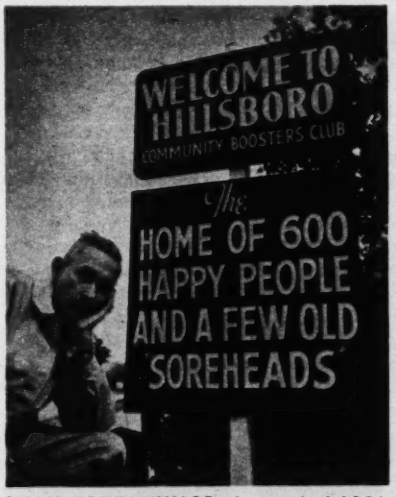
Speaking of Paris, Bob Cummings told about the French politician who fell asleep during a debate and woke up to find he'd been named Premier twice, impeached once, reinstated and awarded the Legion of Honor . . . The high price of coffee inspired Jack Dempsey's Broadway restaurant to post this sign: "Hot Coffee—Easy Terms Arranged." . . . Best of the "shaggy" tales concerned the Eskimo groom who furnished his new igloo with whale-to-whale carpeting . . .

Shrugging off the popularity of the British dance craze, "The Creep," Arthur Murray maintained the Yankee viewpoint. "That," he remarked, "is the worst thing to come out of England since warm beer." . . . In the sports sector, the Giants' Willie Mays wreaked such havoc around the league that someone wondered why the Dodgers hadn't petitioned to keep him in the Army . . .

Those short haircuts became so popular that Garry Moore said his barber made him look like the victim of a hit-and-run lawnmower . . . The Russians reported the discovery of a new drug that sheds weight rapidly, prompting Arthur Godfrey to comment: "Like removing a head, for instance?" . . . Bill Lawrence claimed to have met an unusual triple-threat college football player—one who could run, kick and pass examinations . . .

Most popular quip down around Civil Defense Headquarters concerned the three sizes in H-bombs: Big, Bigger and Where Is Everybody? . . . Eddy Arnold cross-bred a poodle and a schnauzer and called the puppies Schnoodles . . . The male vogue for Bermuda shorts inspired a 6-year-old boy to ask, "Mom, when will I be old enough to wear those short pants?" . . . Gambling in Las Vegas increased so drastically that Allan Sherman suggested a new grade school be called "P.S. 6 to 5." . . .

Jimmy Komack visited a psychiatrist who furnished his office in nutty pine . . . Foreign cars were made the butt of many jokes.



SMALL-TOWN HUMOR also marked 1954. In Hillsboro, Ind., businessman Jack Crane poses with sign he put up to twit Booster Club members who oppose Club civic projects.

Jackie Gleason told about the Texas kid who asked for a midget sports car. "Sorry, son," drawled his dad. "You've got enough toys already." . . . Peter Donald invented a California pen that writes under smog . . .

And remember the McCarthy-Stevens hearings? Our pet joke had Mr. J. Myer Schine running into a friend he hadn't seen in years. Asked the friend: "How's your family?" Said Schine: "Fine. Have you heard my son David is in the Army?" ■

America's Youngest (Human) TV Star

Bobby Martin has made the grade at 8 months

MUTUAL INTEREST: Bobby seems to find the camera as attractive as the camera finds him.

by LLOYD SHEARER

HOLLYWOOD.

THE YOUNG MAN pictured on these pages recently achieved exclusive ranking as the youngest star on network television in this country. His name: Bobby Martin. His age: 8 months.

The American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, the union to which Bobby belongs (he paid his $100 membership fee a few weeks ago), admits that there are a few rabbits and monkeys on TV who are younger than he. When it comes to human beings, though, Bobby is the most.

He appears daily on Seven to Eight, an early-morning NBC program telecast throughout the West. His salary is $23.10 a day. In his own lovable way he is impossible to interview, hasn't muttered a word to date, and does absolutely nothing for himself. There's only one way to enlist his co-operation: bribery. He's a sucker for sugar lumps and brightly colored pencils.

On Seven to Eight, one of those catch-all programs with everything from weather reports to guest appearances, mama (Mrs. Rose Martin of nearby Northridge) plops her first-born into a glass-enclosed crib. While popular music plays in the background, the camera closes in on Bobby as he coos, giggles, smiles, tries on crazy party hats and laughs. Only once in three months has he been caught bawling on-camera. (He fell asleep ahead of schedule and the glare of the floodlights awakened him.) In the same period he prompted more mail and aroused more interest on the program than such visiting celebrities as Vice President Richard Nixon, actor Rock Hudson, crooner Tony Martin and hat designer Lilly Daché.

The fellow who first suggested a baby's appearance on Seven to Eight is Joe Thompson, veteran NBC producer. "We wanted to capture a good segment of the women's audience," Thompson explains, "and at that hour of the morning one of the sure-fire devices is a baby.

"Other attention-getters are dogs and bathing beauties. As Bobby grows older, we plan to get him a dog and a girl – that is, if his parents will stand for them."

Bobby's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Martin, may or may not do that. Right now they don't exactly know why their infant son is in television. Neither parent has a show-business background. Mr. Martin is the regional manager for an automotive-supply house, and Mrs. Martin declares, "We don't need the money. Besides, 30 per cent of Bobby's salary is held for him by the state until he becomes of age.

"When I gave birth to Bobby," she adds, "one of the neighbors told me to register him with the Screen Actors Guild. I did—just as a lark, you know. Next thing I knew, a gentleman phoned and asked if I'd put my baby on Seven to Eight."

Mrs. Martin conferred with her husband, who's on the road a good deal of the time. He said, "Try it. It'll give you and the baby something to do."

Today, starting every morning at 6 (Bobby's wake-up time), it certainly does. ■

Gripping the edge of his crib, Bobby practices expressions suitable to reflection, jollity, alert interest, rage. On TV he may be photographed no more than a minute at a time, five times an hour.

PARTY HAT delights young Bobby. He wins viewers with the oldest, surest trick of all — being himself.

PROUD PARENTS smile at each other across their beaming baby. What about Bobby's future in show business? They'll wait and see.

Eyes closed, 79-year-old Albert Schweitzer ponders a Karsh question on the subject closest to his heart: Africa.

A Top Photographer's Favorite Portrait

Of all his 1954 pictures, Yousuf Karsh prefers this pensive face of Albert Schweitzer

● In a year, the famous Canadian portrait photographer Yousuf Karsh takes thousands of pictures. In 1954 his favorite is the remarkable work above. Karsh was traveling in Europe last summer, interviewing celebrities in words and on film, when he heard that Albert Schweitzer was coming up from his missionary station in French Equatorial Africa to accept the Nobel peace prize. Karsh made contact with the doctor-philosopher-musician in his native Alsatian village, spent most of two days with him before unlimbering camera and stroboscopic lights. During a conversational pause he snapped this reflective, luminous portrait of "one of the world's great men—a profound thinker, selflessly dedicated to relieving the suffering of humanity. All my life I dreamed of photographing him," says Karsh. "Now I have done it."
